I dedicate this book to the memory of my counselor and my friend,—that most delightful of story-tellers, that most charming of comrades,—my dear old Mother; whose early life was spent near the shade of the Colonel's porch, and whose keen enjoyment of the stories between these covers — stories we have so often laughed over together — is still among my pleasantest recollections.

OF CARTERSVILLE

I

THE COLONEL'S HOUSE IN BEDFORD PLACE

THE dinner was at the colonel's, — an old-fashioned, partly furnished, two-story house nearly a century old which crouches down behind a larger and more modern dwelling fronting on Bedford Place within a stone's throw of the tall clock tower of Jefferson Market.

The street entrance to this curious abode is marked by a swinging wooden gate opening into a narrow tunnel which dodges under the front house. It is an uncanny sort of passageway, mouldy and wet from a long-neglected leak overhead, and is lighted at night by a rusty lantern with dingy glass sides.

On sunny days this gruesome tunnel frames from the street a delightful picture of a bit of the yard beyond, with the quaint colonial door and its three steps let down in a welcoming way.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Its retired location and shabby entrance brought it quite within the colonel's income, and as the rent was not payable in advance, and the landlord patient, he had surrounded himself not only with all the comforts but with many of the luxuries of a more pretentious home. In this he was assisted by his negro servant Chad, — an abbreviation of Nebuchadnezzar, — who was chambermaid, cook, butler, body-servant, and boots, and who by his marvellous tales of the magnificence of "de old fambly place in Caartersville" had established a credit among the shopkeepers on the avenue which would have been denied a much more solvent customer.

To this hospitable retreat I wended my way in obedience to one of the colonel's characteristic notes : —

NO. 51 BEDFORD PLACE, Friday.

Everything is booming — Fitz says the scheme will take like the measles ; dinner to-morrow at six — don't be late.

CARTER.

The colonel had written several similar notes that week, — I lived but a few streets away, — all on the spur of the moment, and all expressive of his varying moods and wants ; the former characterized by his unbounded enthusiasm over his new railroad scheme, and the latter by such requests as these: "Will you lend me half a dozen napkins? Mine are all in the wash, and I want enough to carry me over Sunday. Chad will bring, with your permission, the extra pair of andirons you spoke of." Or, "Kindly hand Chad the two magazines and a corkscrew."

Of course Chad always tucked them under his arm, and carried them away, for nobody ever refused the colonel anything—nobody who loved him. As for himself, he would have been equally generous in return, and have emptied his house, and even his pocketbook, in my behalf, had that latter receptacle been capable of further effort. Should this have been temporarily overstrained, — and it generally was, — he would have promptly borrowed the amount of the nearest friend, and then have rubbed his hands and glowed all day with delight at being able to relieve my necessity.

"I am a Virginian, suh. Command me," was his way of putting it.

So to-night I pushed open the swinging door, felt my way along the dark passage, and crossed the small yard choked with snow at the precise minute when the two hands of the great clock in the tall tower pointed to six.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The door was opened by Chad.

"Walk right in, suh; de colonel's in de dinin'-room."

Chad was wrong. The colonel was at that moment finishing his toilet upstairs, in what he was pleased to call his "dressing-room," his cheery voice announcing that fact over the balusters as soon as he heard my own, coupled with the additional information that he would be down in five minutes.

What a cosy, charming interior, this dining-room of the colonel's! It had once been two rooms, and two very small ones at that, divided by folding doors. From out the rear one there had opened a smaller room answering to the space occupied by the narrow hall and staircase in front. All the interior partitions and doors dividing these three rooms had been knocked away at some time in its history, leaving an L interior having two windows in front and three in the rear.

Some one of its former occupants, more luxurious than the others, had panelled the walls of this now irregular-shaped apartment with a dark wood running halfway to the low ceiling, badly smoked and blackened by time, and had built two fireplaces, — one for an open wood fire which to-night laughed at me from behind my own andirons, and the other to hold an old-fashioned English grate set into the chimney with wide hobs, convenient and necessary for the various brews and mixtures for which the colonel was famous.

Midway, equally warmed by both fires, stood the table, its centre freshened by a great dish of celery, white and crisp, with covers for three on a snow-white cloth resplendent in old India blue, while at each end shone a pair of silver coasters, — heirlooms from Carter Hall, one holding a cut-glass decanter of madeira, the other awaiting its customary bottle of claret.

On the hearth before the wood fire rested a pile of plates, also India blue, and on the mantel over the grate stood a row of bottles adapting themselves, like all good foreigners, to the rigors of our climate. Add a pair of silver candelabra with candles, — the colonel despised gas, — dark red curtains drawn close, three or four easy-chairs, a few etchings and sketches loaned from my studio, together with a modest side-board at the end of the L, and you have the salient features of a room so inviting and restful that you wanted life made up of one long dinner, continually served within its hospitable walls.

But I hear the colonel calling down the back stairs, —

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

"Not a minute over eighteen, Chad. You ruined those ducks last Sunday."

The next moment he had me by both hands.

"My dear Major, I am pa'alized to think I kep' you waitin'. Just up from my office. Been workin' like a slave, suh. Only five minutes to dress befo' dinner. Have a drop of sherry and a dash of bitters, or shall we wait for Fitzpatrick? No? All right! He should have been here befo' this. You don't know Fitz? Most extraord'nary man; a great mind, suh; literature, science, politics, finance, everything at his fingers' ends. He has been of the greatest service to me since I have been in New York in this railroad enterprise, which I am happy to say is now reachin' a culmination. You shall hear all about it after dinner. Put yo' body in that chair and yo' feet on the fender—my fire and yo' fender! No, Fitz's fender and yo' andirons! Charmin' combination!"

It is always one of my delights to watch the colonel as he busies himself about the room, warming a big chair for his guests, punching the fire, brushing the sparks from the pile of plates, and testing the temperature of the claret lovingly with the palms of his hands.

He is perhaps fifty years of age, tall and slightly built. His iron gray hair is brushed straight back from his forehead, overlapping his collar behind. His eyes are deep-set and twinkling ; nose prominent ; cheeks slightly sunken ; brow wide and high ; and chin and jaw strong and marked. His mustache droops over a firm, well-cut mouth and unites at its ends with a gray goatee which rests on his shirt front.

Like most Southerners living away from great cities, his voice is soft and low, and tempered with a cadence that is delicious.

He wears a black broadcloth coat, — a double-breasted garment, — with similar colored waistcoat and trousers, a turn-down collar, a shirt of many plaits which is under-starched and over-wrinkled but always clean, large cuffs very much frayed, a narrow black or white tie, and low shoes with white cotton stockings.

This black broadcloth coat, by the way, is quite the most interesting feature of the colonel's costume ; so many changes are constantly made in its general make-up that you never quite believe it is the same ill-buttoned, shiny garment until you become familiar with its possibilities.

When the colonel has a funeral or other serious matter on his mind, this coat is buttoned close up under his chin, showing only the upper edge of his white collar, his gaunt throat, and the stray end of a black cravat. When he is invited to dinner he buttons it lower down, revealing as well a bit of his plaited shirt, and when it is a wedding this old stand-by is thrown wide open, discovering a stiff, starched, white waistcoat with ivory buttons and snowy neck-cloth.

These several make-ups used once to surprise me, and I often found myself insisting that the looseness and grace with which this garment flapped about the colonel's thin legs were only possible in a brand-new coat having all the spring and lightness of youth in its seams. I was always mistaken. I had only to look at the mismated buttons and the ravelled edge of the lining fringing the tails. It was the same coat.

The colonel wore to-night the lower-button style with the white tie. It was indeed the adjustment of this necessary article which had consumed the five minutes passed in his dressing-room, slightly lengthened by the time necessary to trim his cuffs — a little nicety which he rarely overlooked and which it mortified him to forget.

What a frank, generous, tender-hearted fellow he is : happy as a boy ; hospitable to the verge of beggary ; enthusiastic as he is visionary ; simple as he is genuine ! A Virginian of good birth, fair education, and limited knowledge of the world and of men, proud of his ancestry, proud of his State, and proud of himself; believing in States' rights, slavery, and the Confederacy; and away down in the bottom of his soul still clinging to the belief that poor white trash of the earth includes about everybody outside of Fairfax County.

With these antecedents it is easy to see that his "reconstruction" is as hopeless as that of the famous Greek frieze, outwardly whole and yet always a patchwork. So he chafes continually under what he believes to be the tyranny and despotism of an undefined autocracy, which, in a general way, he calls "the government," but which really refers to the distribution of certain local offices in his own immediate vicinity.

When he hands you his card it bears this unabridged inscription:—

Cartersville, Virginia.

He omits "United States of America," simply because it would add nothing to his identity or his dignity.

"There's Fitz," said the colonel as a sharp

double knock sounded at the outer gate ; and the next instant a stout, thick-set, round-faced man of forty, with merry, bead-like eyes protected by big-bowed spectacles, pushed open the door, and peered in good-humoredly.

The colonel sprang forward and seized him by both shoulders.

“What the devil do you mean, Fitz, by comin’ ten minutes late? Don’t you know, suh, that the burnin’ of a canvasback is a crime?”

“Stuck in the snow? Well, I’ll forgive you this once, but Chad won’t. Give me yo’ coat — bless me! it is as wet as a setter dog. Now put yo’ belated carcass into this chair which I have been warmin’ for you, right next to my dearest old friend, the Major. Major, Fitz! — Fitz, the Major! Take hold of each other. Does my heart good to get you both together. Have you brought a copy of the prospectus of our railroad? You know I want the Major in with us on the groun’ flo’. But after dinner — not a word befo’.”

This railroad was the colonel’s only hope for the impoverished acres of Carter Hall, but lately saved from foreclosure by the generosity of his aunt, Miss Nancy Carter, who had redeemed it with almost all her savings, the house and half of the outlying lands being, thereupon, deeded to her. The other half reverted to the colonel.

I explained to Fitz immediately after his hearty greeting that I was a humble landscape painter, and not a major at all, having not the remotest connection with any military organization whatever ; but that the colonel always insisted upon surrounding himself with a staff, and that my promotion was in conformity with this habit.

The colonel laughed, seized the poker, and rapped three times on the floor. A voice from the kitchen rumbled up, —

“ Comin', sah ! ”

It was Chad “ dishin' the dinner ” below, his explanations increasing in distinctness as he pushed the rear door open with his foot, — both hands being occupied with the soup tureen, which he bore aloft and placed at the head of the table.

In a moment more he retired to the outer hall and reappeared brilliant in white jacket and apron. Then he ranged himself behind the colonel's chair, and with great dignity announced that dinner was served.

“ Come, Major ! Fitz, sit where you can warm yo' back — you are not thawed out yet. One minute, gentlemen, — an old custom of my ancestors, which I never omit.”

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The blessing was asked with becoming reverence ; there was a slight pause, and then the colonel lifted the cover of the tureen and sent a savory cloud of incense to the ceiling.

The soup was a cream of something with baby crabs. There was also a fish, boiled, with slices of hard-boiled eggs fringing the dish, ovalled by a hedge of parsley and supplemented by a pyramid of potatoes with their jackets ragged as tramps. Then a ham, brown and crisp, and bristling all over with cloves.

Then the ducks !

It was beautiful to see the colonel's face when Chad, with a bow like a folding jackknife, held this dish before him.

"Lay 'em here, Chad — right under my nose. Now hand me that pile of plates sizzlin' hot, and give that caarvin' knife a turn or two across the hearth. Major, dip a bit of celery in the salt and follow it with a mou'ful of claret. It will prepare yo' palate for the kind of food we raise gentlemen on down my way. See that red blood, suh, followin' the knife !"

"Suit you, marsa ? " Chad never forgot his slave days.

"To a turn, Chad, — I would n't take a thousand dollars for you," replied the colonel, relapsing as unconsciously into an old habit.

THE COLONEL'S HOUSE IN BEDFORD PLACE

It was not to be wondered at that the colonel loved a good dinner. To dine well was with him an inherited instinct ; one of the necessary preliminaries to all the important duties in life. To share with you his last crust was a part of his religion ; to eat alone, a crime.

“ There, Major,” said the colonel, as Chad laid the smoking plate before me, “ is the breast of a bird that fo’ days ago was divin’ for wild celery within fo’ty miles of Caarter Hall. My dear old Aunt Nancy sends me a pair every week, bless her sweet soul ! Fill yo’ glasses and let us drink to her health and happiness.” Here the colonel rose from his chair. “ Gentlemen, the best thing on this earth — a true Southern lady !

“ Now, Chad, the red pepper.”

“ No jelly, Colonel ? ” said Fitz, with an eye on the sideboard.

“ Jelly ? No, suh ; not a suspicion of it. A pinch of salt, a dust of cayenne, then shut yo’ eyes and mouth, and don’t open them ’cept for a drop of good red wine. It is the salt marsh in the early mornin’ that you are tastin’, suh, — not molasses candy. You Nawtherners don’t really treat a canvasback with any degree of respect. You ought never to come into his presence when he lies in state without takin’ off yo' hats. That may be one reason why he skips over the Nawthern States when he takes his annual fall outin'." And he laughed heartily.

"But you use it on venison?" argued Fitz.

"Venison is diff'ent, suh. That game lives on moose buds, the soft inner bark of the sugar maple, and the tufts of sweet grass. There is a propriety and justice in his endin' his days smothered in sweets; but the wild duck, suh, is bawn of the salt ice, braves the storm, and lives a life of peyil and hardship. You don't degrade a' oyster, a soft-shell crab, or a clam with confectionery; why a canvasback duck?"

"Now, Chad, serve coffee."

The colonel pushed back his chair, and opened a drawer in a table on his right, producing three small clay pipes with reed stems and a buckskin bag of tobacco. This he poured out on a plate, breaking the coarser grains with the palms of his hands, and filling the pipes with the greatest care.

Fitz watched him curiously, and when he reached for the third pipe, said, —

"No, Colonel, none for me; smoke a cigar — got a pocketful."

"Smoke yo' own cigars, will you, and in the presence of a Virginian? I don't believe you have got a drop of Irish blood left in yo' veins, or you would take this pipe."

THE COLONEL'S HOUSE IN BEDFORD PLACE

"Too strong for me," remonstrated Fitz.

"Throw that villanous device away, I say, Fitz, and surprise yo' nostrils with a whiff of this. Virginia tobacco, suh, — raised at Caar-terville, — cured by my own servants. No? Well, you will, Major. Here, try that; every breath of it is a nosegay," said the colonel, turning to me.

"But, Colonel," continued Fitz, with a sly twinkle in his eye, "your tobacco pays no tax. With a debt like ours it is the duty of every good citizen to pay his share of it. Half the cost of this cigar goes to the government."

It was a red flag to the colonel, and he laid down his pipe and faced Fitz squarely.

"Tax! On our own productions, suh! Raised on our own land! Are you again forgettin' that you are an Irishman and becomin' one of these money-makin' Yankees? Haven't we suffe'd enough — robbed of our property, our lands confiscated, our slaves torn from us; nothin' left but our honor and the shoes we stand in?"

The colonel on cross-examination could not locate any particular wholesale robbery, but it did not check the flow of his indignation.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

"Take, for instance, the town of Caartersville: look at that peaceful village which for mo' than a hundred years has enjoyed the privileges of free government; and not only Caartersville, but all our section of the State."

"Well, what 's the matter with Cartersville?" asked Fitz, lighting his cigar.

"Mattah, suh! Just look at the degradation it fell into hardly ten years ago. A Yankee judge jurisdicthin' our laws, a Yankee sheriff enfo'cin' 'em, and a Yankee postmaster distributin' letters and sellin' postage stamps."

"But they were elected all right, Colonel, and represented the will of the people."

"What people? Yo' people, not mine. No, my dear Fitz; the Administration succeeding the war treated us shamefully, and will go down to postehity as infamous."

The colonel here left his chair and began pacing the floor, his indignation rising at every step.

"To give you an idea, suh," he continued, "of what we Southern people suffe'd immediately after the fall of the Confederacy, let me state a case that came under my own observation.

"Colonel Temple Talcott of F'okeer County, Virginia, came into Talcottville one mornin', suh, — a town settled by his ancestors, — ridin' upon his horse, or rather a mule belongin' to his overseer. Colonel Talcott, suh, belonged to one of the vehy fust families in Virginia. He was a son of Jedge Thaxton Talcott, and grandson of General Snowdon Stafford Talcott of the Revolutionary War. Now, suh, let me tell you right here that the Talcott blood is as blue as the sky, and that every gentleman bearin' the name is known all over the county as a man whose honor is dearer to him than his life, and whose word is as good as his bond. Well, suh, on this mornin' Colonel Talcott left his plantation in charge of his overseer, — he was workin' it on shares, — and rode through his estates to his ancestral town, some five miles distant. It is true, suh, these estates were no longer in his name, but that had no bearin' on the events that followed ; he ought to have owned them, and would have done so but for some vehy ungentlemanly fo'closure proceedin's which occurred immediately after the war.

THE COLONEL'S HOUSE IN BEDFORD PLACE

“ On arriving at Talcottville the colonel dismounted, handed the reins to his servant, — or perhaps one of the niggers around the do', — and entered the post-office. Now, suh, let me tell you that one month befo', the government, contrary to the express wishes of a great many of our leadin' citizens, had sent a Yankee postmaster to Talcottville to administer the postal affairs of that town. No sooner had this man taken possession than he began to be exclusive, suh, and to put on airs. The vehy fust air he put on was to build a fence in his office and compel our people to transact their business through a hole. This in itself was vehy gallin', suh, for up to that time the mail had always been dumped out on the table in the stage office, and every gentleman had he'ped himself. The next thing was the closin' of his mail-bags at a' hour fixed by himself. This became a great inconvenience to our citizens, who were often late in finishin' their correspondence, and who had always found our former postmaster willin' either to hold the bag over until the next day, or to send it across to Drummondtown by a boy to catch a later train.

“Well, suh, Colonel Talcott's mission to the post-office was to mail a letter to his factor in Richmond, Virginia, on business of the utmost importance to himself, — namely, the raisin' of a small loan upon his share of the crop. Not the crop that was planted, suh, but the crop that he expected to plant.

“Colonel Talcott approached the hole, and with that Chesterfieldian manner which has distinguished the Talcotts for mo' than two centuries asked the postmaster for the loan of a three-cent postage stamp.

"To his astonishment, suh, he was refused.

"Think of a Talcott in his own county town bein' refused a three-cent postage stamp by a low-lived Yankee, who had never known a gentleman in his life ! The colonel's first impulse was to haul the scoundrel through the hole and caarve him ; but then he remembered that he was a Talcott and could not demean himself, and drawin' himself up again with that manner which was grace itself he requested the loan of a three-cent postage stamp until he should communicate with his factor in Richmond, Virginia ; and again he was refused. Well, suh, what was there left for a high-toned Southern gentleman to do ? Colonel Talcott drew his revolver and shot that Yankee scoundrel through the heart, and killed him on the spot.

"And now, suh, comes the most remarkable part of this story. If it had not been for Major Tom Yancey, Jedge Kerfoot, and myself, there would have been a lawsuit."

Fitz lay back in his chair and roared.

"And they did not hang the colonel ?"

"Hang a Talcott ! No, suh ; we don't hang gentlemen down our way. Jedge Kerfoot vely properly charged the coroner's jury that it was a matter of self-defence, and Colonel Talcott was not detained mo' than haalf an hour."

The colonel stopped, unlocked a closet in the sideboard, and produced a black bottle labelled in ink, "Old Cherry Bounce, 1848."

"You must excuse me, gentlemen, but the discussion of these topics has quite unnerved me. Allow me to share with you a thimbleful."

II

THE GARDEN SPOT OF VIRGINIA SEEKS AN OUTLET TO THE SEA

CHAD was just entering the small gate which shut off the underground passage when I arrived opposite the colonel's cosy quarters. I had come to listen to the details of that blooming enterprise with the epidemic proclivities, the discussion of which had been cut short by the length of time it had taken to kill the postmaster the night before.

It was quite evident that the colonel expected guests, for Chad was groaning under a square wicker basket, containing, among other luxuries and necessities, half a dozen bottles of claret, a segment of cheese, and some heads of lettuce; the whole surmounted by a clean leather-covered pass-book inscribed with the name and avenue number of the confiding and accommodating grocer who supplied the colonel's daily wants.

"De colonel an' Misser Fizpat'ic bofe waitin' for you, sah," said that obsequious darky, preceding me through the dark passage. I followed, mounted the old-fashioned wooden steps, and fell into the outstretched arms of the colonel before I could touch the knocker.

"Here he is, Fitz!" and the next instant I was sharing with that genial gentleman the warmth of the colonel's fire.

"Now then, Chad," called out the colonel, "take this lettuce and give it a dip in the snow for five minutes; and here, Chad, befo' you go hand me that claret. Bless my soul! it is as cold as a dog's nose; Fitz, set it on the mantel. And hurry down to that mutton, Chad. Never mind the basket. Leave it where it is."

Chad chuckled out to me as he closed the door, "'Spec' I know mo' 'bout dat saddle den de colonel. It ain't a-burnin' none." And the colonel, satisfied now that Chad's hand had reached the oven door below, made a vigorous attack on the blazing logs with the tongs, and sent a flight of sparks scurrying up the chimney.

There was always a glow and breeze and sparkle about the colonel's fire that I found nowhere else. It partook to a certain extent of his personality — open, bright, and with a great draught of enthusiasm always rushing up a chimney of difficulties, buoyed up with the hope of the broad clear of the heaven of success above.

"My fire," he once said to me, "is my friend ; and sometimes, my dear boy, when you are all away and Chad is out, it seems my only friend. After it talks to me for hours we both get sleepy together, and I cover it up with its gray blanket of ashes and then go to bed myself. Ah, Major ! when you are gettin' old and have no wife to love you and no children to make yo' heart glad, a wood fire full of honest old logs, every one of which is doing its best to please you, is a great comfort."

"Draw closer, Major ; v'hy cold night, gentlemen. We do not have any such weather in my State. Fitz, have you thawed out yet ? "

Fitz looked up from a pile of documents spread out on his lap, his round face aglow with the firelight, and compared himself to half a slice of toast well browned on both sides.

"I am glad of it. I was worried about you when you came in. You were chilled through."

Then turning to me : " Fact is, Fitz is a little overworked. Enormous strain, suh, on a man solving the vast commercial problems that he is called upon to do every day."

After which outburst the colonel crossed the room and finished unpacking the basket, placing the cheese in one of the empty plates on the table, and the various other commodities on the sideboard. When he reached the pass-book he straightened himself up, held it off admiringly, turned the leaves slowly, his face lighting up at the goodly number of clean pages still between its covers, and said thoughtfully, —

“Very beautiful custom, this pass-book system, gentlemen, and quite new to me. One of the most co'teous attentions I have received since I have taken up my residence Nawth. See how simple it is. I send my servant to the sto' for my supplies. He returns in haalf an hour with everything I need, and brings back this book which I keep, — remember, gentlemen, which I keep, — a mark of confidence which in this degen'rate age is refreshin'. No vulgar bargainin', suh; no disagreeable remarks about any former unsettled account. It certainly is delightful.”

“When are the accounts under this system generally paid, Colonel?” asked Fitz.

With the exception of a slight tremor around the corners of his mouth, Fitz's face expressed nothing but the idlest interest.

“I have never inquired, suh, and would not hurt the gentleman's feelin's by doin' so for the world," he replied with dignity. "I presume, when the book is full."

THE GARDEN SPOT OF VIRGINIA

Whatever might have been Fitz's mental workings, there was no mistaking the colonel's. He believed every word he said.

"What a dear old trump the colonel is," said Fitz, turning to me, his face wrinkling all over with suppressed laughter.

All this time Chad was passing in and out, bearing dishes and viands, and when all was ready and the table candles were lighted, he announced that fact softly to his master and took his customary place behind his chair.

The colonel was as delightful as ever, his talk ranging from politics and family blood to possum hunts and modern literature, while the mutton and its accessories did full credit to Chad's culinary skill.

In fact, the head of the colonel's table was his throne. Nowhere else was he so charming, and nowhere else did the many sides to his delightful nature give out such varied hues.

Fitz, practical business man as he was, would listen to his many schemes by the hour, charmed into silence and attentive appreciation by the sublime faith that sustained his host, and the perfect honesty and sincerity underlying everything he did.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

But it was not until the cheese had completely lost its geometrical form, the coffee served and the pipes lighted, that the subject which of all others absorbed him was broached. Indeed, it was a rule of the colonel's, never infringed upon, that no matter how urgent the business, the dinner hour was to be kept sacred.

"Salt yo' food, suh, with humor," he would say. "Season it with wit and sprinkle it all over with the charm of good fellowship, but never poison it with the cares of yo' life. It is an insult to yo' digestion, besides bein', suh, a mark of bad breedin'."

"Now, Major," began the colonel, turning to me, loosening the string around a package of papers, and spreading them out like a game of solitaire, "draw yo' chair closer. Fitz, hand me the map."

A diligent search revealed the fact that the map had been left at the office, and so the colonel proceeded without it, appealing now and then to Fitz, who leaned over his chair, his arm on the table.

"Befo' I touch upon the financial part of this enterprise, Major, let me show you where this road runs," said the colonel, reaching for the casters. "I am sorry I have n't the map, but we can get along very well with this ; ” and he unloaded the cruets.

“ This mustard-pot, here, is Caartersville, the startin’-point of our system. This town, suh, has now a population of mo’ than fo’ thousand people ; in five years it will have fo’ty thousand. From this point the line follows the bank of the Big Tench River — marked by this caarvin’ knife — to this salt-cellar, where it crosses its waters by an iron bridge of two spans, each of two hundred and fifty feet. Then, suh, it takes a sharp bend to the south’ard and stops at my estate, the road-bed skirtin’ within a convenient distance of Caarter Hall.

“ Please move yo’ arm, Fitz. I have n’t room enough to lay out the city of Fairfax. Thank you.

“ Just here,” continued the colonel, utilizing the remains of the cheese, “ is to be the future city of Fairfax, named after my ancestor, suh, General Thomas Wilmot Fairfax of Somerset, England, who settled here in 1680. From here we take a course due nawth, stopping at Talcottville, eight miles, and thence nawthwesterly to Warrentown and the broad Atlantic ; in all fifty miles.”

“ Any connecting road at Warrentown ? ” I asked.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“No, suh, nor anywhere else along the line. It is absolutely virgin country, and this is one of the strong points of the scheme, for there can be no competition ;” and the colonel leaned back in his chair, and looked at me with the air of a man who had just informed me of a legacy of half a million of dollars and was watching the effect of the news.

I preserved my gravity, and followed the imaginary line with my eye, bounding from the mustard-pot along the carving knife to the salt-cellar and back in a loop to the cheese, and then asked if the Big Tench could not be crossed higher up, and if so why was it necessary to build twelve additional miles of road.

“To reach Carter Hall,” said Fitz quietly.

“Any advantage ?” I asked in perfect good faith.

The colonel was on his feet in a moment.

“Any advantage ? Major, I am surprised at you ! A place settled mo’ than one hundred years ago, belongin’ to one of the vehy fust fam’lies of Virginia, not to be of any advantage to a new enterprise like this ! Why, suh, it will give an air of respectability to the whole thing that nothin’ else could ever do. Leave out Caarter Hall, suh, and you pa’alize the whole scheme. Am I not right, Fitz ?”

THE GARDEN SPOT OF VIRGINIA

“Unquestionably, Colonel. It is really all the life it has,” replied Fitz, solemn as a graven image, blowing a cloud of smoke through his nose.

“And then, suh,” continued the colonel with increasing enthusiasm, oblivious to the point of Fitz’s remark, “see the improvements. Right here to the eastward of this cheese we shall build a round-house marked by this napkin-ring, which will accommodate twelve locomotives, construct extensive shops for repairs, and erect large foundries and caar-shops. Altogether, suh, we shall expend at this point mo’ than — mo’ than — one million of dollars ;” and the colonel threw back his head and gazed at the ceiling, his lips computing imaginary sums.

“Befo’ these improvements are complete it will be necessary, of course, to take care of the enormous crowds that will flock in for a restin’-place. So to the left of this napkin-ring, on a slightly risin’ ground, — just here where I raise the cloth, — is where the homes of the people will be erected. I have the refusal ” — here the colonel lowered his voice — “of two thousand acres of the best private-residence land in the county, contiguous to this very spot, which I can buy for fo’ dollars an acre. It is worth fo’ dollars a square foot if it is worth a penny.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

But, suh, it would be little short of highway rob'ry to take this property at that figger, and I shall arrange with Fitz to include in his prospectus the payment of one hundred dollars an acre for this land, payable either in the common stock of our road or in the notes of the company, as the owners may elect."

"But, Colonel," said I, with a sincere desire to get at the facts, "where is the Golconda — the gold mine? Where do I come in?"

"Patience, my dear Major; I am coming to that.

"Fitz, read that prospectus."

"I have," said Fitz, turning to the colonel, "somewhat modified your rough draft, to meet the requirements of our market; but not materially. Of course I cannot commit myself to any fixed earning capacity until I go over the ground, which we will do together shortly. But" — raising the candle to the level of his nose — "this is as near as I can come to your ideas with any hopes of putting the loan through here. I have, as you see, left the title of the bond as you wished, although the issue is a novel one to our Exchange." Then, turning to me, —

"This, of course, is only a preliminary announcement."

"There, Major, is a prospectus that carries conviction on its very face," said the colonel, reaching for the document.

I complimented the eminent financier on his skill, and was about to ask him what it all

meant, when the colonel, who had been studying it carefully, broke in with —

“Fitz, there is one thing you left out.”

“Cartersville?” suggested Fitz.

“Any money in Cartersville?”

“No, suh, not much; but we can subscribe, can’t we? The name and influence of our leadin’ citizens would give tone and dignity to any subscription list. Think of this, suh!” and the colonel traced imaginary inscriptions on the back of Fitz’s prospectus with his forefinger, voicing them as he went on: —

The Hon. JOHN PAGE LOWNES,

Member of the State Legislature . . . 1000 shares

The Hon. I. B. KERFOOT,

Judge of the District Court of Fairfax

Major THOMAS C. YANCEY,

Late of the Confederate Army . . . 500 shares

THE GARDEN SPOT OF VIRGINIA

Fitz sharpened a lead pencil and without a word inserted the desired amendment.

The colonel studied the document for another brief moment and struck another snag.

“And, Fitz, what do you mean by ‘full protection guaranteed’?”

“To the bondholder, of course, — the man who pays the money.”

“What kind of protection?”

“Why, the right to foreclose the mortgage when the interest is not paid, of course,” said Fitz, with a surprised look.

“Put yo’ pencil through that line, quick — none of that for me! This fo’closure business has ruined haalf the gentlemen in our county, suh. But for that foolishness two thirds of our fust families would still be livin’ in their homes. No, suh, strike it out!”

“But, my dear Colonel, without that protecting clause you could n’t get a banker to touch your bonds with a pair of tongs. What recourse have they?”

“What reco’s’e? Reorganization, suh! A boilin’-down process which will make the stock — which we practically give away at fifty cents on the dollar — twice as valuable. I appreciate, my dear Fitz, the effo’ts which you are makin’ to dispose of these secu'ities, but you must remember that this plan is mine.

"Now, Major," locking his arm in mine, "listen; for I want you both to understand exactly the way in which I propose to forward this enterprise. Chad, bring me three wine-glasses and put that madeira on the table — don't disturb that railroad! — so.

"My idea, gentlemen," continued the colonel, filling the glasses himself, "is to start this scheme honestly in the beginnin', and avoid all dissatisfaction on the part of these vehy bondholders thereafter.

"Now, suh, in my experience I have always discovered that a vehy general dissatisfaction is sure to manifest itself if the coupons on secu'ities of this class are not paid when they become due. As a gen'ral rule this interest money is never earned for the fust two years, and the money to pay it with is inva'ably stolen from the principal. All this dishonesty I avoid, suh, by the issue of my Deferred Debenture Bonds."

"How?" I asked, seeing the colonel pause for a reply.

"By cuttin' off the fust fo' coupons. Then everybody knows exactly where they stand. They don't expect anythin' and they never get it."

THE GARDEN SPOT OF VIRGINIA

Fitz gave one of his characteristic roars and asked if the fifth would ever be paid.

"I can't at this moment answer, but we hope it will."

"It is immaterial," said Fitz, wiping his eyes. "This class of purchasers are all speculators, and like excitement. The very uncertainty as to this fifth coupon gives interest to the investment, if not to the investor."

"None of yo' Irish impudence, suh. No, gentlemen, the plan is not only fair but reasonable. Two years is not a long period of time in which to foster a great enterprise like the C. & W. A. L. R. R., and it is for this purpose that I issue the Deferred Debentures. Deferred — put off; Debenture — owed. What we owe we put off. Simple, easily understood, and honest."

"Now, suh," turning to Fitz, "if after this frank statement any graspin' banker seeks to trammel this enterprise by any fo'closure clauses, he sha'n't have a bond, suh. I'll take them all myself fust."

Fitz agreed to the striking out of all such harassing clauses, and the colonel continued his inspection.

"One mo' and I am done, Fitz. What do you mean by Founders' shares?"

"Shares for the promoters and the first subscribers. They cost one tenth of the ordinary shares and draw five times as much dividend. It is quite a popular form of investment. They, of course, are not sold until all the bonds are disposed of."

"How many of these Founders' shares are there?"

"Fifty thousand at ten dollars each."

The colonel paused a moment and communed inwardly with himself.

"Put me down for twenty-five thousand, Fitz. Part cash, and the balance in such portion of my estate as will be required for the purposes of the road."

The colonel did not specify the proportions, but Fitz made a pencil memorandum on the margin of the prospectus with the same sort of respectful silence he would have shown the Rothschilds in a similar transaction, while the colonel refilled his glass and held it between his nose and the candle.

"And now, Major, what shall we reserve for you?" said he, laying his hand on my shoulder. Before I could reply Fitz raised his finger, looked at me significantly over the rims of his spectacles, and said, —

"With your permission, Colonel, the Major and I will divide the remaining twenty-five thousand between ourselves.” Then seeing my startled look, “I will give you ample notice, Major, before the first partial payment is called in.”

“You overwhelm me, gentlemen,” said the colonel, rising from his seat and seizing us by the hands. “It has been the dream of my life to have you both with me in this enterprise, but I had no idea it would be realized so soon. Fill yo’ glasses and join me in a sentiment that is dear to me as my life, ‘The garden spot of Virginia in search of an outlet to the sea.’”

Nothing could have been more exhilarating than the colonel’s manner after this. His enthusiasm became so contagious that I began to feel something like a millionaire myself, and to wonder whether this were not the opportunity of my life. Fitz was so far affected that he recanted to a certain extent his disbelief in the omission of the foreclosure clause, and even expressed himself as being hopeful of getting around it in some way.

As for the colonel, the railroad was to him already a fixed fact. He could really shut his eyes at any time and hear the whistle of the down train nearing the bridge over the Trench. Such trifling details as the finding of a banker who would attempt to negotiate the loan, the subsequent selling of the securities, and the minor items of right of way, construction, etc., were matters so light and trivial as not to cause him a moment's uneasiness. Cartersville was to him the centre of the earth, hampered and held back by lack of proper connections with the outlying portions of the universe. What mattered the rest?

"Make a memorandum, Fitz, to have me send for a bridge engineer fust thing after I get to my office in the mornin'. There will be some difficulty in gettin' a proper foundation for the centre-pier of that bridge, and some one should be sent at once to make a survey. We can't be delayed at this point a day. And, Fitz, while I think of it, there should be a wagon bridge at or near this iron structure, and the timber might as well be gotten out now. It will facilitate haulin' supplies into Fairfax City."

Fitz thought so, too, and made a second memorandum to that effect, recording the suggestion very much as a private secretary would an order from his railroad magnate.

The colonel gave this last order with coat thrown open, thumbs in his vest, back to the fire, — an attitude never indulged in except on rare occasions, and then only when the very weight of the problem necessitated a corresponding bracing up, and more breathing room.

These attitudes, by the way, were very suggestive of the colonel's varying moods. Sometimes, when he came home, tired out with the hard pavements of the city, so different from the soft earth of his roads at home, I would find him bunched up in his chair in the twilight, face in hands, elbows on knees, crooning over the fire, the silver streaks in his hair glistening in the flickering firelight, building castles in the glowing coals, — the old manor house restored and the barns rebuilt, the gates rehung, the old quarters repaired, the little negroes again around the doors ; and he once more catching the sound of the yellow-painted coach on the gravel, with Chad helping the dear old aunt down the porch steps. This, deep down in the bottom of his soul, was really the dream and purpose of his life.

It never seemed nearer of realization than now. The very thought suffused his whole being with a suppressed joy, visible in his face even when he began loosening the two lower buttons of his old, threadbare coat, throwing back the lapels and slowly extending his fingers fan-like over his dilating chest.

I always knew what suddenly sweetened his smile from one of triumphant pride to one of tenderness.

“And the old home, Fitz; something must be done there; we must receive our friends properly.”

Fitz agreed to everything, offering an amendment here, and a suggestion there, until our host's enthusiasm reached fever heat.

It was nearly midnight before the colonel had confided to Fitz all the pressing necessities of the coming day. Even then he followed us both to the door, with parting instructions to Fitz, saying over and over again that it had been the happiest night of his life. And he would have gone bareheaded to the outer gate had not Chad caught him halfway down the steps, thrown a coat over his head and shoulders, and gently led him back with —

“'Clar to goodness, Marsa George, what kind foolishness dis yer? Is you tryin' to ketch yo' death?”

Once on the outside and the gate shut, Fitz's whole manner changed. He became suddenly thoughtful, and did not speak until we reached the tall clock tower, with its full moon of a face shining high up against the black winter night.

Then he stood still, looked out over the white street, dotted here and there with belated way-

farers trudging home through the snow, and said, with a tremor in his voice which startled me, —

“I could n’t raise a dollar in a lunatic asylum full of millionaires on a scheme like the colonel’s, and yet I keep on lying to the dear old fellow day after day, hoping that something will turn up by which I can help him out.”

“Then tell him so.”

Fitz laid his hand on my shoulder, looked me straight in the face, and said, —

“I cannot. It would break his heart.”

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

THE colonel's front yard, while as quaint and old-fashioned as his house, was not — if I may be allowed — quite so well-bred.

This came partly from the outdoor life it had always led and from its close association with other yards that had lost all semblance of respectability, and partly from the fact that it had never felt the refining influences of the friends of the house ; for nobody ever lingered in the front yard who by any possibility could get into the front door — nobody, except perhaps now and then a stray tramp, who felt at home at once and went to sleep on the steps.

That all this told upon its character and appearance was shown in the remnants of white-wash on the high wall, scaling off in discolored patches ; in the stagger of the tall fence opposite, drooping like a drunkard between two policemen of posts ; and in the unkempt, bulging rear of the third wall, — the front house, — stuffed with rags and tied up with clothes-lines.

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

If in the purity of its youth it had ever seen better days as a garden — but then no possible stretch of imagination, however brilliant, could ever convert this miserable quadrangle into a garden. It contained, of course, as all such yards do, one lone plant, — this time a honeysuckle, which had clambered over the front door and there rested as if content to stay ; but which later on, frightened at the surroundings, had with one great spring cleared the slippery wall between, reached the rain-spout above, and by its helping arm had thus escaped to the roof and the sunlight.

It is also true that high up on this same wall there still clung the remains of a criss-cross wooden trellis supporting the shivering branches of an old vine, which had spent its whole life trying to grow high enough to look over the tall fence into the yard beyond ; but this was so long ago that not even the landlord remembered the color of its blossoms.

Then there was an old-fashioned hydrant, with a half-spiral crank of a handle on its top and the curved end of a lead pipe always aleak thrust through its rotten side, with its little statues of ice all winter and its spattering slop all summer.

Besides all this there were some broken flower-pots in a heap in one corner, suicides from the window-sills above, and some sagging clothes-lines, and a battered watering-pot, and a box or two that might once have held flowers ; and yet, with all this circumstantial evidence against me, I cannot conscientiously believe that this forlorn courtyard ever could have risen to the dignity of a garden.

But of course nothing of all this can be seen at night. At night one sees only the tall clock tower of Jefferson Market, with its one blazing eye glaring high up over the fence, the little lantern hung in the tunnel, and the glow through the curtains shading the old-fashioned windows of the house itself, telling of warmth and comfort within.

To-night when I pushed open the swinging door — the door of the tunnel entering from the street — the lantern was gone, and in its stead there was only the glimmer of a mysterious light moving about the yard, — a light that fell now on the bare wall, now on the front steps, making threads of gold of the twisted iron railings, then on the posts of the leaning fence, against which hung three feathery objects, grotesque and curious in the changing shadows, and again on some barrels and boxes surrounded by loose straw.

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

Following this light, in fact guiding it, was a noiseless, crouching figure peering under the open steps, groping around the front door, creeping beneath the windows, — moving uneasily with a burglar-like tread.

I grasped my umbrella, advanced to the edge of the tunnel, and called out, —

“Who’s that?”

The figure stopped, straightened up, held a lantern high over its head, and peered into the darkness.

There was no mistaking that face.

“Oh, that’s you, Chad, is it? What the devil are you doing?”

“Lookin’ for one ob dese yer tar’pins Miss Nancy sent de colonel. Dey was seben ob ’em in dis box, an’ now dey ain’t but six. Hole dis light, Major, an’ lemme fumble roun’ dis rain-spout.”

Chad handed me the lantern, fell on his knees, and began crawling around the small yard like an old dog hunting for a ’possum, feeling in among the roots of the honeysuckle, between the barrels that had brought the colonel’s china from Carter Hall, under the steps, way back where Chad kept his wood ashes — but no “brer tar’pin.”

“Well, if dat don’t beat de lan’! Dey was

two ba'els ; one had dat wild turkey an' de pair o' geese you see hangin' on de fence dar, an' de udder ba'el I jest ca'aed down de cellar full er oishters. De tar'pins was in dis box — seben ob 'em. Spec' dat rapsCALLION crawled ober de fence ?” And Chad picked up the basket with the remaining half dozen, and descended the basement steps on his way through the kitchen to the front door above. Before he reached the bottom step I heard him break out with, —

“ Oh, yer you is, you black debbil ! Tryin' to git in de door, is ye ? De pot is whar you 'll git ! ”

At the foot of the short steps, flat on his back, head and legs wriggling like an overturned roach, lay the missing terrapin. It had crawled to the edge of the opening and had fallen down in the darkness.

Chad picked him up and kept on grumbling, shaking his finger at the motionless terrapin, whose head and legs were now tight drawn between its shells.

“ Gre't mine to squash ye ! Wearin' out my old knees lookin' for ye ! Nebber mine, I'm gwine to bile ye fust an' de longest — hear dat ? — de longest ! ” Then, looking up at me, “ I got him, Major — try dat do'. Spec' it's open.

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

Colonel ain't yer yit. Reckon some ob dem moonshiners is keepin' him down town. 'Fo' I forgit it, dar 's a letter for ye hangin' to de mantelpiece."

The door and the letter were both open, the latter being half a sheet of paper impaled by a pin, which alone saved it from the roaring fire that Chad had just replenished.

I held it to the light and learned, to my disappointment, that business of enormous importance to the C. & W. A. L. R. R. might preclude the possibility of the colonel's leaving his office until late. If such a calamity overtook him, would I forgive him and take possession of his house and cellar and make myself as comfortable as I could with my best friend away? This postscript followed:—

"Open the new madeira; Chad has the key."

Chad wreaked his vengeance upon the absconding terrapin by plunging him, with all his sins upon him, headlong into the boiling pot, and half an hour later was engaged at a side table in removing, with the help of an iron fork, the upper shell of the steaming vagabond, for my special comfort and sustenance.

"Tar'pin jes like a crab, Major, on'y got mo' meat to 'em. But you got to know 'em fust to eat 'em. Now, dis yer top shell is de hot plate, an' ye do all yo' eatin' right inside it," said Chad, dropping a spoonful of butter, the juice of a lemon, and a pinch of salt into the impromptu dish.

"Now, Major, take yo' fork an' pick out all dat black meat an' dip it in de sauce, an' wid ebery mou'ful take one o' dem little yaller eggs. Dat's de way we eat tar'pin. Dis yer stewin' him up in pote wine is scand'lous. Can't taste nuffin but de wine. But dat's tar'pin."

I followed Chad's directions to the word, picking the terrapin as I would a crab and smothering the dainty bits in the hot sauce, until only two empty shells and a heap of little bones were left to tell the tale of my appetite.

"Gwine to crawl ober de fence, was ye?" I heard him say with a chuckle as he bore away the débris. "What I tell ye? Whar am ye now?"

"Did Miss Nancy send those terrapin?" I asked, watching the old darky drawing the cork of the new madeira referred to in the colonel's note.

"Ob co'se, Major; Miss Nancy gibs de colonel eberythin'. Did n't ye know dat? She's de on'y one what's got anythin' to gib, an' she would n't hab dat on'y frough de wah her money was in de bank in Baltimo'. I know, 'cause I went dar once to git some for her. De Yankee soldiers searched me ; but some 'possums got two holes."

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

" And did she send him the madeira too ? "

" No, sah ; Mister Grocerman gib him dat."

As he pronounced this name his voice fell, and for some time thereafter he kept silent, brushing the crumbs away, replacing a plate or two, or filling my wineglass, until at last he took his place behind my chair as was his custom with his master. It was easy to see that Chad had something on his mind.

Every now and then a sigh escaped him, which he tried to conceal by some irrelevant remark, as if his sorrow were his own and not to be shared with a stranger. Finally he gave an uneasy glance around, and, looking into my face with an expression of positive pain, said, —

" Don't tell de colonel I axed, but when is dis yer railroad gwine to fotch some money in ? "

" Why ? " said I, wondering what extravagance the old man had fallen into.

" Nuffin, sah ; but if it don't putty quick, dar's gwine to be trouble. Dese yer gemmen on de av'nue is gittin' ugly. When I got dat madary de udder day de tall one wa'n't gwine to gib it to me, pass-book or no pass-book.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

On'y de young one say he 'd seen the colonel, an' he was a gemman an' all right, I would n't 'a' got it at all. De tall gemman was comin' right around hisself — what he wanted to see, he said, was de color ob de colonel's money. Been mo' den two months, an' not a cent.

"Co'se I tole same as I been tellin' him, dat de colonel's folks is quality folks ; but he say dat don't pay de bills."

"Did you tell the colonel?"

"No, sah ; ain't no use tellin' de colonel ; on'y worry him. He's got de pass-book, but I ain't yerd him say nuffin yit 'bout payin' him. I been spectin' Miss Nancy up here, an' de colonel says she's comin' putty soon. She'll fix 'em ; but dey ain't no time to waste."

While he spoke there came a loud knock at the door, and Chad returned trembling with fear, his face the very picture of despair.

"Dat's de tall man hisself, sah, an' his dander's up. I knowed dese Yankees in de war, an' I don't like 'em when dey's ris'. When I tole him de colonel ain't home he look at me pizen-like, same as I was a-lyin' ; an' den he stop an' listen an' say he come back to-night. Trouble comin' ; old coon smells de dog. Wish we was home an' out ob dis !"

I tried to divert his attention into other channels and to calm his fears, assuring him that the colonel would come out all right ; that these enterprises were slow, etc. ; but the old man only shook his head.

“ You know, Major, same as me, dat de colonel ain’t nuffin but a chile, an’ ’bout his bills he ’s wuss. But I ’m yer, an’ I ’m ’sponsible. ‘ Chad,’ he says, ‘ go out an’ git six mo’ bottles of dat old madary ; ’ an’ ‘ Chad, don’t forgit de sweet ile ; ’ an’ ‘ Chad, is we got claret enough to last ober Sunday ? ’ an’ not a cent in de house. I ain’t slep’ none for two nights, worritin’ ober dis business, — an’ I ’m mos’ crazy.”

I laid down my knife and fork and looked up. The old man’s lip was quivering, and something very like a tear stood in each eye.

“ I can’t hab nuffin happen to de fambly, Major. You know our folks is quality, an’ always was, an’ I dassent look my mistress in de face if anythin’ teches Marsa George.” Then bending down he said in a hoarse whisper, “ See dat old clock out dar wid his eye wide open ? Know what’s down below dat in de cellar ? De jail ! ” And two tears rolled down his cheeks.

It was some time before I could quiet the old man's anxieties and coax him back into his usual good humor, and then only when I began to ask him of the old plantation days.

Then he fell to talking about the colonel's father, General John Carter, and the high days at Carter Hall when Miss Nancy was a young lady and the colonel a boy home from the university.

"Dem was high times. We ain't neber seed no time like dat since de wah. Git up in de mawnin' an' look out ober de lawn, an' yer come fo'teen or fifteen couples ob de fustest quality folks, all on horseback ridin' in de gate. Den such a scufflin' round ! Old marsa an' missis out on de po'ch, an' de little pickaninnies runnin' from de quarters, an' all hands helpin' 'em off de horses, an' dey all smokin' hot wid de gallop up de lane.

"An' den sich a breakfast an' sich dancin' an' co'tin' ; ladies all out on de lawn in der white dresses, an' de gemmen in fair-top boots, an' Mammy Jane runnin' round same as a chicken wid its head off, — an' der heads was off befo' dey knowed it, an' dey a-br'ilin' on de grid-iron.

"Dat would go on a week or mo', an' den up dey 'll all git an' away dey 'd go to the nex' plantation, an' take Miss Nancy along wid 'em on her little sorrel mare, an' I on Marsa John's black horse, to take care bofe of 'em. Dem was times !

“My old marsa,” — and his eyes glistened, — “my old Marsa John was a gemman, sah, like dey don't see nowadays. Tall, sah, an' straight as a cornstalk ; hair white an' silky as de tassel ; an' a voice like de birds was singin', it was dat sweet.

“‘Chad,’ he use' ter say, — you know I was young den an' I was his body servant, — ‘Chad, come yer till I bre'k yo' head ;’ an' den when I come he 'd laugh fit to kill hisself. Dat 's when you do right. But when you was a low-down nigger an' got de debbil in yer, an' ole marsa hear it an' send de oberseer to de quarters for you to come to de little room in de big house whar de walls was all books an' whar his desk was, 't wa'n't no birds about his voice den, — mo' like de thunder.”

“Did he whip his negroes ? ”

“No, sah ; don't reckelmember a single lick laid on airy nigger dat de marsa knowed of ; but when dey got so bad — an' some niggers is dat way — den dey was sold to de swamp lan's. He would n't hab 'em round 'ruptin' his niggers, he use' ter say.

“Hab coffee, sah ? Won't take a minute to bile it. Colonel ain't been drinkin' none lately, an' so I don't make none."

I nodded my head, and Chad closed the door softly, taking with him a small cup and saucer, and returning in a few minutes followed by that most delicious of all aromas, the savory steam of boiling coffee.

"My Marsa John," he continued, filling the cup with the smoking beverage, "never drank nuffin but tea, eben at de big dinners when all de gemmen had coffee in de little cups — dat's one ob 'em you's drinkin' out ob now; dey ain't mo' dan fo' on 'em left. Old marsa would have his pot ob tea; Henny use' ter make it for him; makes it now for Miss Nancy.

"Henny was a young gal den, long 'fo' we was married. Henny b'longed to Colonel Lloyd Barbour, on de next plantation to ourn.

"Mo' coffee, Major?" I handed Chad the empty cup. He refilled it, and went straight on without drawing breath.

"Wust scrape I eber got into wid old Marsa John was ober Henny. I tell ye she was a har-ricane in dem days. She come into de kitchen one time when I was helpin' git de dinner ready an' de cook had gone to de spring house, an' she says, —

"Chad, what ye cookin' dat smells so nice?"

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

“ ‘Dat ’s a goose,’ I says, ‘cookin’ for Marsa John’s dinner. We got quality,’ says I, pointin’ to de dinin’-room do’.

“ ‘Quality !’ she says. ‘Spec’ I know what de quality is. Dat ’s for you an’ de cook.’

“ Wid dat she grabs a caarvin’ knife from de table, opens de do’ ob de big oven, cuts off a leg ob de goose, an’ dis’pears round de kitchen corner wid de leg in her mouf.

“ ‘Fo’ I knowed whar I was Marsa John come to de kitchen do’ an’ says, ‘Gittin’ late, Chad ; bring in de dinner.’ You see, Major, dey ain’t no up an’ down stairs in de big house, like it is yer ; kitchen an’ dinin’-room all on de same flo’.

“ Well, sah, I was scared to def, but I tuk dat goose an’ laid him wid de cut side down on de bottom of de pan ’fo’ de cook got back, put some dressin’ an’ stuffin’ ober him, an’ shet de stove do’. Den I tuk de sweet potatoes an’ de hominy an’ put ’em on de table, an’ den I went back in de kitchen to git de baked ham. I put on de ham an’ some mo’ dishes, an’ marsa says, lookin’ up, —

“ ‘I t’ought dere was a roast goose, Chad.’

“ ‘I ain’t yerd nothin’ ’bout no goose,’ I says. ‘I’ll ask de cook.’

“ Next minute I yerd old marsa a-hollerin’, —

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“ ‘ Mammy Jane, ain’t we got a goose ? ’ ”

“ ‘ Lord-a-massy ! yes, marsa. Chad, you wuthless nigger, ain’ you tuk dat goose out yit ? ’ ”

“ ‘ Is we got a goose ? ’ said I.

“ ‘ Is we got a goose ? Did n’t you help pick it ? ’ ”

“ ‘ I see whar my hair was short, an’ I snatched up a hot dish from de hearth, opened de oven do’, an’ slide de goose in jes as he was, an’ lay him down befo’ Marsa John.

“ ‘ Now see what de ladies ’ll have for dinner,’ says old marsa, pickin’ up his caarvin’ knife.

“ ‘ What ’ll you take for dinner, miss ? ’ says I ; ‘ baked ham ? ’ ”

“ ‘ No,’ she says, lookin’ up to whar Marsa John sat ; ‘ I think I ’ll take a leg ob dat goose ’ — jes so.

“ ‘ Well, marsa cut off de leg an’ put a little stuffin’ an’ gravy on wid a spoon, an’ says to me, ‘ Chad, see what dat gemman ’ll have.’ ”

“ ‘ What ’ll you take for dinner, sah ? ’ says I ; ‘ nice breast o’ goose, or slice o’ ham ? ’ ”

“ ‘ No ; I think I ’ll take a leg of dat goose,’ he says.

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

“But, Major, you oughter seen ole marsa lookin’ for de udder leg ob dat goose! He rolled him ober on de dish, dis way an’ dat way, an’ den he jabbed dat ole bone-handled caarvin’ fork in him an’ hel’ him up ober de dish an’ looked under him an’ on top ob him, an’ den he says, kinder sad like, —

“ ‘Chad, whar is de udder leg ob dat goose?’

“ ‘It did n’t hab none,’ says I.

“ ‘You mean ter say, Chad, dat de geoses on my plantation on’y got one leg?’

“ ‘Some ob ’em has an’ some ob ’em ain’t. You see, marsa, we got two kinds in de pond, an’ we was a little boddered to-day, so Mammy Jane cooked dis one ’cause I cotched it fust.’

“ ‘Well,’ said he, lookin’ like he look when he send for you in de little room, ‘I’ll settle wid ye after dinner.’

“ ‘Well, dar I was shiverin’ an shakin’ in my shoes, an’ droppin’ gravy an’ spillin’ de wine on de tablecloth, I was dat shuck up; an’ when de dinner was ober he calls all de ladies an’ gemmen an’ says, ‘Now come down to de duck pond. I’m a-gwine to show dis nigger dat all de geoses on my plantation got mo’ den one leg.’

“ ‘I followed ’long, trapesin’ after de whole kit an’ b’ilin’, an’ when we got to de pond” — here Chad nearly went into a convulsion with suppressed laughter — “ dar was de geeses sittin’ on a log in de middle of dat ole green goose pond wid one leg stuck down, so, an’ de udder tucked under de wing.”

Chad was now on one leg, balancing himself by my chair, the tears running down his cheeks.

“ ‘Dar, marsa,’ says I, ‘don’t ye see? Look at dat ole gray goose! Dat’s de berry match ob de one we had to-day.’

“Den de ladies all hollered an’ de gemmen laughed so loud dey yerd ’em at de big house.

“ ‘Stop, you black scoun’rel!’ Marsa John says, his face gittin’ white an’ he a-jerkin’ his handkerchief from his pocket. ‘Shoo!’

“Major, I hope to have my brains kicked out by a lame grasshopper if ebery one ob dem geeses did n’t put down de udder leg!

“ ‘Now, you lyin’ nigger,’ he says, raisin’ his cane ober my head, ‘I’ll show you’ —

“ ‘Stop, Marsa John!’ I hollered; ‘’t ain’t fair, ’t ain’t fair.’

“ ‘Why ain’t it fair?’ says he.

“ ‘’Cause,’ says I, ‘you did n’t say “Shoo!” to de goose what was on de table.’ ”¹

¹ This story, and the story of the “Postmaster” in a preceding chapter, I have told for so many years and to so many people, and with such varied amplifications, that I have long since persuaded myself that they are creations of

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

Chad laughed until he choked.

“ And did he thrash you ? ”

“ Marsa John ? No, sah. He laughed loud as anybody ; an’ den dat night he says to me as I was puttin’ some wood on de fire, —

“ ‘ Chad, where did dat leg go ? ’ An’ so I ups an’ tells him all about Henny, an’ how I was lyin’ ’cause I was feared de gal would git hurt, an’ how she was on’y a-foolin’, thinkin’ it was my goose ; an’ den de ole marsa look in de fire for a long time, an’ den he says, —

“ ‘ Dat ’s Colonel Barbour’s Henny, ain’t it, Chad ? ’

“ ‘ Yes, marsa,’ says I.

“ Well, de next mawnin’ he had his black horse saddled, an’ I held the stirrup for him to git on, an’ he rode ober to de Barbour plantation, an’ didn’t come back till plumb black night. When he come up I held de lantern so I could see his face, for I wa’n’t easy in my min’ all day. But it was all bright an’ shinin’ same as a’ angel’s.

“ ‘ Chad,’ he says, handin’ me de reins, ‘ I bought yo’ Henny dis arternoon from Colonel my own. I surmise, however, that the basis of the “ Post-master ” can be found in the corner of some forgotten newspaper, and I know now that the “ One-Legged Goose ” is as old as the Decameron.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Barbour, an' she 's comin' ober to-morrow, an' you can bofe git married next Sunday.'"

A cheerful voice at the yard door, and the next moment the colonel was stamping his feet on the hall mat, his first word to Chad an inquiry after my comfort, and his second an apology to me for what he called his brutal want of hospitality.

"But I could n't help it, Major. I had some letters, suh, that could not be postponed. Has Chad taken good care of you? No dinner, Chad; I dined down town. How is the madeira, Major?"

I expressed my entire approbation of the wine, and was about to fill the colonel's glass when Chad leaned over with the same anxious look in his face.

"De grocerman was here, Colonel, an' lef' word dat he was comin' ag'in later."

"You don't say so, Chad, and I was out: most unfortunate occurrence! When he calls again show him in at once. It will give me great pleasure to see him."

Then turning to me, his mind on the pass-book and its empty pages, "I'll lay a wager, Major, that man's father was a gentleman. The fact is, I have not treated him with proper respect. He has shown me every courtesy since I have been here, and I am ashamed to say that I have not once entered his doors. His calling twice in one evening touches me deeply. I did not expect to find yo' tradespeople so polite."

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

Chad's face was a study while his master spoke, but he was too well trained, and still too anxious over the outcome of the expected interview, to do more than bow obsequiously to the colonel, — his invariable custom when receiving an order, — and to close the door behind him.

"That old servant," continued the colonel, watching Chad leave the room, and drawing his chair nearer the fire, "has been in my fam'ly ever since he was bawn. But for him and his old wife, Mammy Henny, I would be homeless to-night." And then the colonel, with that soft cadence in his voice which I always noticed when he spoke of something that touched his heart, told me with evident feeling how, in every crisis of fire, pillage, and raid, these two faithful souls had kept unceasing watch about the old house, refastening the wrenched doors, replacing the shattered shutters, or extinguishing the embers of abandoned bivouac fires. Indeed, for months at a time they were its only occupants, outside of strolling marauders and bands of foragers, and but for their untiring devotion its tall chimneys would long since have stood like tombstones over the grave of its ashes. Then he added, with a break in his voice that told how deeply he felt it, —

“Do you know, Major, that when I was a prisoner at City Point that darky tramped a hundred miles through the coast swamps to reach me, crossed both lines twice, hung around for three months for his chance, and has carried in his leg ever since the ball intended for me the night I escaped in his clothes, and he was shot in mine.

“I tell you, suh, the color of a man’s skin don’t make much diffe’ence sometimes. Chad was bawn a gentleman, and he ’ll never get over it.”

As he was speaking, the object of his eulogy opened the hall door, and the next instant a tall, red-headed man with closely trimmed side whiskers, and wearing a brown check suit and a blue necktie, ran the gauntlet of Chad’s profound but anxious bow, and advanced towards the colonel, hat in hand.

“Which is Mr. Carter ? ”

The colonel arose gracefully. “I am Colonel Caarter, suh, and I presume you are the gentleman to whom I am indebted for so many courtesies. My servant tells me that you called earlier in the evenin'. I regret, suh, that I was detained so late at my office, and I have to thank you for perseve'in' the second time. I assure you, suh, that I esteem it a special honor."

The tall gentleman with the auburn whiskers wiped his face with a handkerchief, which he took from his hat, and stated with some timidity that he hoped he did not intrude at that late hour. He had sent his pass-book, and — "I have looked it over, suh, repeatedly, with the greatest pleasure. It is a custom new to us in my county, but it meets with my hearty approval. Give yo' hat to my servant, suh, and take this seat by the fire."

The proprietor of the hat, after some protestations, suffered Chad to bear away that grateful protection to his slightly bald head, — retaining his handkerchief, which he finally rolled up into a little wad and kept tightly clenched in the perspiring palm of his left hand, — and then threw out the additional hope that everything was satisfactory.

"Delicious, suh ; I have not tasted such madeira since the wah. In my cellar at home, suh, I once had some old madeira of '28 that was given to my father, the late General John Caarter, by old Judge Thornton. You, of course, know that wine, suh. Ah ! I see that you do."

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

And then followed one of the colonel's delightful monologues descriptive of all the vintages of that year, the colonel constantly appealing to the dazed and delighted groceryman to be set right in minor technical matters, the grocer understanding them as little as he did the Aztec dialects, — the colonel himself supplying the needed data and then thanking the auburn gentleman for the information so charmingly that for the moment that worthy tradesman began to wonder why he had not long before risen from the commonplace level of canned vegetables to the more sublime plane of wines in the wood.

"Now the madeira you sent me this mornin', suh, is a trifle too fruity for my taste. Chad, open a fresh bottle."

The owner of the pass-book instantly detected a very decided fruity flavor, but thought he had another wine, which he would send in the morning, that might suit the colonel's palate better.

The colonel thanked him, and then drifted into the wider field of domestic delicacies, — the preserving of fruits, the making of pickles as practised on the plantations by the old

AN OLD FAMILY SERVANT

Virginia cooks, — the colonel waxing eloquent over each production, and the future wine merchant becoming more and more enchanted as the colonel flowed on.

When he rose to go the grocer had a mental list of the things he would send the colonel in the morning all arranged in his commercial head, and so great was his delight that, after shaking hands with me once and with the colonel three times, he would also have extended that courtesy to Chad had not that perfectly trained servant checkmated him by filling his extended palm with the rim of his own hat.

When Chad returned from bowing him through the tunnel, the lines in his face a tangle of emotions, the colonel was standing on the mat in his favorite attitude — back to the fire, coat thrown open, thumbs in his armholes, his outstretched fingers beating woodpecker tattoos on his vest.

Somehow the visit of the grocer had lifted him out of the cares of the day. How, he could not tell. Perhaps it was the fragrance of the madeira; perhaps the respectful, overawed bow, — the bow of the tradesman the world over to the landed proprietor, — restoring to him for one brief moment that old feudal supremacy which above all else his soul loved. Perhaps it was only the warmth and cheer and comfort of it all.

Whatever it was, it buoyed and strengthened him. He was again in the old dining-hall at home : the servants, moving noiselessly about ; the cut-glass decanters reflected in the polished mahogany ; the candles lighted ; his old, white-haired father, in his high-backed chair, sipping his wine from the slender glass.

Ah, the proud estate of the old plantation days ! Would it ever be his again ?

THE ARRIVAL OF A TRUE SOUTHERN LADY

MISTRESS yer, sah ! Come yistidd'y mawnin'."

How Chad beamed all over when this simple statement fell from his lips !

I had not seen him since the night when he stood behind my chair and with bated breath whispered his anxieties lest the second advent of "de grocerman" should bring dire destruction to the colonel's household.

To-day he looked ten years younger. His kinky gray hair, generally knotted into little wads, was now divided by a well-defined path starting from the great wrinkle in his forehead and ending in a dense tangle of underbrush that no comb dared penetrate. His face glistened all over. His mouth was wide open, showing a great cavity in which each tooth seemed to dance with delight. His jacket was as white and stiff as soap and starch could make it, while a cast-off cravat of the colonel's — double starched to suit Chad's own ideas of propriety — was tied in a single knot, the two ends reaching to the very edge of each ear. To crown all, a red carnation flamed away on the lapel of his jacket, just above an outside pocket, which held in check a pair of white cotton gloves bulging with importance and eager for use. Every time he bowed he touched with a sweep both sides of the narrow hall.

It was the first time in some weeks that I had seen the interior of the colonel's cosy dining-room by daylight. Of late my visits had been made after dark, with drawn curtains, lighted candles, and roaring wood fires. But this time it was in the morning, — and a bright, sunny, lovely spring morning at that, — with one window open in the L and the curtains drawn back from the other; with the honeysuckle beginning to bud, its long runners twisting themselves inquiringly through the half-closed shutters as if anxious to discover what all this bustle inside was about.

It was easy to see that some other touch besides that of the colonel and his faithful man-of-all-work had left its impress in the bachelor apartment. There was a general air of order apparent. The irregular line of foot gear which decorated the washboard of one wall, beginning with a pair of worsted slippers and ending with a wooden bootjack, was gone. Whisk brooms and dusters that had never known a restful nail since they entered the colonel's service were now suspended peacefully on convenient hooks. Dainty white curtains, gathered like a child's frock, flapped lazily against the broken green blinds, while some sprays of arbutus, plucked by Miss Nancy on her way to the railroad station, drooped about a tall glass on the mantel.

Chad had solved the mystery, — Aunt Nancy came yesterday.

I found the table set for four, its chief feature being a tray bearing a heap of eggshell cups and saucers I had not seen before, and an old-fashioned tea-urn humming a tune all to itself.

“De colonel 's out, but he comin' back d'rectly,” Chad said eagerly, all out of breath with excitement. Then followed the information that Mr. Fitzpatrick was coming to breakfast, and that he was to tell Miss Nancy the moment we arrived. He then reduced the bulge in his outside pocket by thrusting his big hands into his white gloves, gave a sidelong glance at the flower in his buttonhole, and bore my card aloft with the air of a cupbearer serving a princess.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

A soft step on the stair, the rustle of silk, a warning word outside, "Look out for dat lower step, mistress — dat's it;" and Miss Nancy entered the room.

No, I am wrong. She became a part of it; as much so as the old andirons and the easy-chairs and the old-fashioned mantelpieces, the snowy curtains and the trailing vine. More so when she gave me the slightest dip of a curtsy and laid her dainty, wrinkled little hand in mine, and said in the sweetest possible voice how glad she was to see me after so many years, and how grateful she felt for all my kindness to the dear colonel. Then she sank into a quaint rocking-chair that Chad had brought down behind her, rested her feet on a low stool that mysteriously appeared from under the table, and took her knitting from her reticule.

She had changed somewhat since I last saw her, but only as would an old bit of precious stuff that grew the more mellow and harmonious in tone as it grew the older. She had the same silky gray hair — a trifle whiter, perhaps; the same frank, tender mouth, winning wherever she smiled; the same slight, graceful figure; and the same manner — its very simplicity a reflex of that refined and quiet life she had always led. For hers had been an isolated life, buried since her girlhood in a great house far away from the broadening influences of a city, and saddened by the daily witness of a slow decay of all she had been taught to revere. But it had been a life so filled with the largeness of generous deeds that its returns had brought her the love and reverence of every living soul she knew.

While she sat and talked to me of her journey I had time to enjoy again the quaintness of her dress, — the quaintness of forty years before. There was the same old-fashioned, soft gray silk, with up-and-down stripes spotted with sprigs of flowers, the lace cap, with its frill of narrow pink ribbons and two wide pink strings that fell over the shoulders, and the handkerchief of India mull folded across the breast and fastened with an amethyst pin. Her little bits of feet — they were literally so — were incased in white stockings and heelless morocco slippers bound with braid.

But her dress was never sombre. She always seemed to remember, even in her bright ribbons and silks, the days of her girlhood, when half the young men in the county were wild about her. When she moved she wafted towards you a perfume of sweet lavender — the very smell that you remember came from your own mother's old-fashioned bureau drawer when she let you stand on tiptoe to see her pretty things. When you kissed her — and once I did — her cheek was as soft as a child's and fragrant with rose-water.

But I hear the colonel's voice outside, laughing with Fitz.

“Come in, suh, and see the dearest woman in the world.”

The next instant he burst in, dressed in his gala combination, — white waistcoat and cravat, the old coat thrown wide open as if to welcome the world, and a bunch of red roses in his hand.

“Nancy, here 's my dear friend Fitz, whom I have told you about, — the most extraord'nary man of modern times. Ah, Major! you here? Came in early, did you, so as to have Aunt Nancy all to yo'self? Sit down, Fitz, right alongside of her.” And he kissed her hand gallantly. “Is n't she the most delightful bit of old porcelain you ever saw in all yo' bawn days?”

Miss Nancy rose, made another of her graceful curtsies, and begged that neither of us would mind the colonel's raillery; she never could keep him in order. And she laughed softly as she gave her hand to Fitz, who touched it very much as if he quite believed the colonel's reference to the porcelain to be true.

"NANCY, HERE'S MY DEAR FRIEND FITZ, WHOM I HAVE TOLD YOU ABOUT."

"There you go, Nancy, 'busin' me like a dog, and here I've been a-trampin' the streets for a' hour lookin' for flowers for you! You are breakin' my heart, Miss Caarter, with yo' coldness and contempt. Another word and you shall not have a single bud." And the colonel gayly tucked a rose under her chin with a loving stroke of his hand, and threw the others in a heap on her lap.

"Breakfast sarved, mistress," said Chad in a low voice.

The colonel gave his arm to his aunt with the air of a courtier; Fitz and I disposed ourselves on each side; Chad, with reverential mien, screwed his eyes up tight; and the colonel said grace with an increased fervor in his voice, no doubt remembering in his heart the blessing of the last arrival.

Throughout the entire repast the colonel was in his gayest mood, brimming over with anecdotes and personal reminiscences and full of his rose-colored plans for the future.

Many things had combined to produce this happy frame of mind. There was first the Scheme, which had languished for weeks, owing to the vice-like condition of the money-market, — another of Fitz's mendacious excuses, — and which had now been suddenly galvanized into temporary life by an inquiry made by certain bankers who were seeking an outlet for English capital, and who had expressed a desire to investigate the "Garden Spot of Virginia." Only an "inquiry," but to the colonel the papers were already signed. Then there was the arrival of his distinguished guest, whom he loved devotedly, and with a certain old-school gallantry and tenderness as picturesque as it was interesting. Last of all there was that important episode of the bills. For Miss Nancy, the night she arrived, had collected all the household accounts, including the highly esteemed pass-book, — they were all of the one kind, unpaid, — and had dispatched Chad early in the morning to the several creditors with his pocket full of crisp banknotes.

When Chad had returned from this liquidating tour, and the full meaning of that trusty agent's mission had dawned upon the colonel, he had buttoned his coat tightly over his chest, straightened himself up, sought out his aunt, and, with some dignity and a slightly injured air, had said, —

"Nancy, yo' interfere'nce in my household affairs this mornin' was vely creditable to yo' heart, and deeply touches me ; but if I thought you regarded it in any other light except as a short tempo'ary loan, it would offend me keenly. Within a few days, however, I shall receive a vely large amount of secu'ities from an English syndicate that is investigatin' my railroad. I shall then return the amount to you with interest, together with that other sum which you loaned me when I left Caarter Hall."

The little lady's only reply was to slip her hand into his and kiss him on the forehead.

And yet that very morning he had turned his pockets inside out for the remains of the last dollar of the money she had given him when he left home. When it had all been raked together, and its pitiable insufficiency had become apparent, this dialogue took place : —

"Chad, did you find any money on the flo' when you breshed my clothes?"

"No, Colonel."

"Ain't none dar, sah."

Then Chad, with that same anxious look suddenly revived in his face, went below into the kitchen, mounted a chair, took down an old broken teacup from the top shelf, and poured out into his wrinkled palm a handful of small silver coin, — his entire collection of tips, and all the money he had. This he carried to the colonel, with a lie in his mouth that the recording angel blotted out the moment it fell from his lips.

And the colonel gathered it all in, and went out and spent every penny of it on roses for “dear Nancy!”

All of these things, as I have said, had acted like a tonic on the colonel, bracing him up to renewed efforts, and reacting on his guests, who in return did their best to make the breakfast a merry one.

Fitz, always delightful, was more brilliant than ever, his native wit, expressed in a brogue with verbal shadings so slight that it is hardly possible to give it in print, keeping the table in a roar; while Miss Nancy, encouraged by the ease and freedom of everybody about her, forgot for a time her quiet reserve, and was charming in the way she turned over the leaves of her own youthful experiences.

And so the talk went on until, with a smile to everybody, the little lady rose, called Chad, who stood ready with shawl and cushion, and, saying she would retire to her room until the gentlemen had finished smoking, disappeared through the doorway.

The talk had evidently aroused some memory long buried in the colonel's mind ; for when Fitz had gone, the dear old fellow picked up the glass holding the roses which he had given his aunt in the morning, and, while repeating her name softly to himself, buried his face in their fragrance. Something, perhaps, in their perfume stirred that haunting memory the deeper, for he suddenly raised his head and burst out, —

“ Ah, Major, you ought to have seen that woman forty years ago ! Why, suh, she was just a rose herself ! ”

And then followed in disconnected scraps, as if he were recalling it to himself, with long pauses between, that story which I had heard hinted at before, — a story never told the children, and never even whispered in Aunt Nancy's presence, — the one love affair of her life.

She and Robert had grown up together, — he a tall, brown-eyed young fellow just out of the university, and she a fair-haired, joyous girl, with half the county at her feet. Nancy had not loved him at first, nor ever did until the day he had saved her life in that wild dash across country when her horse took fright, and he, riding neck and neck, had lifted her clear of her saddle. After that there had been but one pair of eyes and arms for her in the wide world. All of that spring and summer, as the colonel put it, she was like a bird pouring out her soul in one continuous song. Then there had come a night in Richmond, — the night of the ball, — followed by her sudden return home, hollow-eyed and white, and the mysterious postponement of the wedding for a year.

Everybody wondered, but no one knew, and only as the months went by did her spirits gain a little, and she began to sing once more.

It was at a great party on a neighboring estate, amid the swim of the music and the whirl of soft lace. Suddenly loud voices and threats, a shower of cards flung at a man's face, an uplifted arm caught by the host. Then a hall door thrust open and a half-frenzied man with disordered dress staggering out. Then the startled face of a young girl all in white, and a cry no one ever forgot, —

“Oh, Robert, — not again?”

Her long ride home in the dead of the night, Nancy alone in the coach, her escort — a distant cousin — on horseback behind.

A TRUE SOUTHERN LADY

Then the pursuit. The steady rise and fall of the hoof-beats back in the forest ; the reining in of Robert's panting horse covered with foam ; his command to halt ; a flash, and then that sweet face stretched out in the road in the moonlight by the side of the overturned coach, the cousin bending over her with a bullet hole in his hat, and Robert, ghastly white and sobered, with the smoking pistol in his hand.

Then the long, halting procession homeward in the gray dawn.

It was not so easy after this to keep the secret shut away ; so one day, when the shock had passed, — her arms about her uncle's neck, — the whole story came out. She told of that other night there in Richmond, with Robert reeling and half crazed ; of his promise of reform, and the postponement of the wedding, while she waited and trusted : so sad a story that the old uncle forgot all the traditions that bound Southern families, and sustained her in her determination never to see Robert again.

For days the broken-hearted lover haunted the place, while an out-bound ship waited in Norfolk harbor.

Even Robert's father, crushed and humiliated by it all, had made no intercession for him. But now, he begged, would she see his son for the last time, only that he might touch her hand and say good-by ?

That good-by lasted an hour, Chad walking his horse all the while before the porch door, until that tottering figure, holding to the railings and steadying itself, came down the steps.

A shutter thrown back, and Nancy at the open window watching him mount.

As he wheels he raises his hat. She pushes aside the climbing roses.

In an instant he has cleared the garden beds, and has reined in his horse just below her window-sill. Looking up into her face, —

“Nancy, for the last time, shall I stay ? ”

She only shakes her head.

“Then look, Nancy, look ! This is your work ! ”

A gleam of steel in a clenched hand, a burst of smoke, and before Chad can reach him Nancy's lover lies dead in the flowers at her feet.

It had not been an easy story for the colonel. When he ceased he passed his hand across his forehead as if the air of the room stifled him. Then laying down his pipe, he bent once more over the slender vase, his face in the roses.

“May I come in ? ”

A TRUE SOUTHERN LADY

In an instant the colonel's old manner returned.

"May you come in, Nancy? Why, you dear woman, if you had stayed away five minutes longer I should have gone for you myself. What! Another skein of yarn?"

"Yes," she said, seating herself. "Hold out your hands."

The loop slipped so easily over the colonel's arms that it was quite evident that the rôle was not new to him.

"Befo' I forget it, Nancy, Mr. Fitzpatrick was called suddenly away to attend to some business connected with my railroad, and left his vely kindest regards for you, and his apologies for not seein' you befo' he left."

Fitz had said nothing that resembled this, so far as my memory served me, but it was what he ought to have done, and the colonel always corrected such little slips of courtesy by supplying them himself.

"Politeness," he would sometimes say, "is becomin' rarer every day. I tell you, suh, the disease of bad manners is mo' contagious than the small-pox."

So the deception was quite pardonable in him.

"And what does Mr. Fitzpatrick think of the success of your enterprise, George?"

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The colonel sailed away as usual with all his balloon topsails set, his sea-room limited only by the skein, while his aunt wound her yarn silently, and listened with a face expressive at once of deep interest and hope, mingled with a certain undefined doubt.

As the ball grew in size, she turned to me, and, with a penetration and practical insight into affairs for which I had not given her credit, began to dissect the scheme in detail. She had heard, she said, that there was lack of connecting lines and consequent absence of freight, as well as insufficient harbor facilities at Warren-town.

I parried the questions as well as I could, begging off on the plea that I was only a poor devil of a painter with a minimum knowledge of such matters, and ended by referring her to Fitz.

The colonel, much to my surprise, listened to every word without opening his lips, — a silence encouraged at first by his pride that she could talk so well, and maintained thereafter because of certain misgivings awakened in his mind as to the ultimate success of his pet enterprise.

When she had punctured the last of his little balloons, he laid his hand on her shoulder, and, looking into her face, said, —

A TRUE SOUTHERN LADY

“Nancy, you really don’t mean that my railroad will never be built ? ”

“No, George ; but suppose it should not earn its expenses ? ”

Her thoughts were new to the colonel. Nobody except a few foolish people in the Street, anxious to sell less valuable securities, and utterly unable to grasp the great merits of the Cartersville and Warrentown Air Line Railroad plan, had ever before advanced any such ideas in his presence. He loosened his hands from the yarn, and took a seat by the window. His aunt’s misgivings had evidently so thoroughly disturbed him that for an instant I could see traces of a certain offended dignity, coupled with a nervous anxiety lest her inquiries had shaken my own confidence in his scheme.

He began at once to reassure me. There was nothing to be uneasy about. Look at the bonds ! Note the perfect safety of the plan of finance, — the earlier coupons omitted, the subsequent peace of the investor ! The peculiar location of the road, with the ancestral estates dotted along its line ! The dignity of the several stations ! He could hear them now in his mind called out as they whistled down brakes, “Carter Hall ! ” “Barboursville ! ” “Talcott ! ” No ; there was nothing about the road that should disturb his aunt. For all that a still more anxious look came into his face. He began pacing the floor, buried in deep thought, his thumbs hooked behind his back. At last he stopped and took her hand.

“Dear Nancy, if anything should happen to you it would break my heart. Don’t be angry, it is only the Major; but yo’ talk with him has so disturbed me that I am determined to secure you against personal loss.”

Miss Nancy raised her eyes wonderingly. She evidently did not catch his meaning.

“You have been good enough, my dear, to advance me certain sums of money which I still owe. I want to pay these now.”

“But, George, you” —

“My dearest Nancy,” — and he stooped down, and kissed her cheek, — “I will have my way. Of co’sse you did n’t mean anything, only I cannot let another hour pass with these accounts unsettled. Think, Nancy; it is my right. The delay affects my honor.”

The little lady dropped her knitting on the floor, and looked at me in a helpless way.

The colonel opened the table drawer, and handed me pen and ink.

A TRUE SOUTHERN LADY

I looked at his aunt inquiringly. She nodded her head in assent.

“Yes, if it pleases George.”

I began with the usual form, entering the words, “I promise to pay,” and stopped for instructions.

“Payable when, Colonel?” I asked.

“As soon as I get the money, suh.”

“But you will do that anyhow, George.”

“Yes, I know, Nancy; but I want to settle it in some safe way.”

Then he gazed at the ceiling in deep thought.

“I have it, Major!” And the colonel seized the pen. The note read as follows:—

On demand I promise to pay Ann Carter the sum of six hundred dollars, value received, with interest at the rate of six per cent. from January 1st.

Payable as soon as possible.

GEORGE FAIRFAX CARTER.

I looked to see what effect this unexpected influx of wealth would produce on the dear lady; but the trustful smile never wavered.

She read to the very end the modest scrap of paper so suddenly enriched by the colonel’s signature, repeated in a whisper to herself,

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“Payable as soon as possible,” folded it with as much care as if it had been a Bank of England note, then thanked the colonel graciously, and tucked it in her reticule.

V

AN ALLUSION TO A YELLOW DOG

THE colonel's office, like many other of his valued possessions, was in fact the property of somebody else.

It really belonged to a friend of Fitzpatrick, who had become so impressed by the Virginian's largeness of manner and buoyancy of enthusiasm that he had whispered to Fitz to bring him in at once and give him any desk in the place ; adding that " in a sagging market the colonel would be better than a war boom."

So the colonel moved in — not a very complicated operation in his case ; his effects being confined to an old leather portfolio and a bundle of quill pens tied up with a bit of Aunt Nancy's white yarn. The following day he had nailed his visiting card above the firm's name in the corridor, hung his hat and coat on the proprietor's peg, selected a desk nearest the light, and was as much at home in five minutes as if he owned the whole building.

There was no price agreed upon. Once, when

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Fitz delicately suggested that all such rents were generally payable monthly, the colonel, after some difficulty in grasping the idea, had said, —

“ I could not offer it, suh. These gentlemen have treated me with a hospitality so generous that its memory will never fade from my mind. I cannot bring our relations down to the level of bargain and sale, suh ; it would be vulgar.”

The colonel was perfectly sincere. As for himself, he would have put every room in his own Carter Hall at their service for any purpose or for any length of time, and have slept in the woodshed himself ; and he would as soon have demanded the value of the bottle of wine on his own table as ask pay for such trivial courtesies.

Nor did he stop at the rent. The free use of stamps, envelopes, paper, messenger service, and clerks were to him only evidences of a lordly sort of hospitality which endeared the real proprietor of the office all the more to him, because it recalled the lavish display of the golden days of Carter Hall.

“ Permit a guest to stamp his own letters, suh ? Never ! Our servants attended to that.”

Really he owed his host nothing. No office of its size in the Street made so much money for its customers in a bull market. Nobody lost heart in a tumble and was sold out — that is, nobody to whom the colonel talked. Once convince the enthusiastic Virginian that the scheme was feasible, — and how little eloquence was needed for that ! — and the dear old fellow took hold with as much gusto as if it had been his own.

The vein in the copper mine was always going to widen out into a six-foot lead ; never by any possibility could it grow any smaller. The trust shares were going up, — “ not a point or two at a time, gentlemen, but with the spring of a panther, suh.” Of course the railroad earnings were a little off this month, but wait until the spring opened : “ Then, suh, you will see a revival that will sweep you off yo’ feet.”

Whether it was good luck or the good heart that the colonel put into his friend’s customers, the results were always the same. Singular as it may seem, his cheery word just at the right time tided over the critical moment many an uncertain watcher at the “ ticker,” often to an enlargement of his bank account. Nor would he allow any one to pay him for any service of this kind, even though he had spent days engrossed in their affairs.

“ Take money, suh, for helpin’ a friend out of a hole ? My dear suh, I see you do not intend to be disco'teous ; but look at me, suh ! There 's my hand ; never refer to it again." And then he would offer the offender his card in the hope, perhaps, that its ample record might furnish some further slight suggestion as to who he really was.

His popularity, therefore, was not to be wondered at. Everybody regarded him kindly, total stranger as he was, and although few of them believed to any extent in his " Garden Spot of Virginia," as his pet enterprise soon came to be known around the Street, everybody wished it well, and not a few would have started it with a considerable subscription could the colonel have managed the additional thousands required to set it on its financial legs.

Fitz never lost heart in the scheme, — that is, never when the colonel was about. As the weeks rolled by and one combination after the other failed, and the well-thumbed bundle of papers in the big blue envelope was returned with various comments : " In view of our present financial engagements we are unable to undertake your very attractive railroad scheme," or the more curt " Not suited to our line of customers," he would watch the colonel's face anxiously, and rack his brain for some additional excuse.

AN ALLUSION TO A YELLOW DOG

He always found one. Tight money, or news from Europe, or an overissue of similar bonds; next week it would be better. And the colonel always believed him. Fitz was his guiding star, and would lead him to some safe haven yet. This faith was his stronghold, and his only one.

This morning, however, there was a touch of genuine enthusiasm about Fitz. He rushed into the office, caught up the blue bundle and the map, nearly upsetting the colonel, who was balanced back in his chair with his long legs over the desk, — a favorite attitude when down town, — rushed out, and returned in half an hour with a fat body surmounted by a bald head fringed about with gray curls.

He was the advance agent of that mysterious combination known to the financial world as an "English syndicate," an elusive sort of commercial sea-serpent with its head in London and its tail around the globe. The "inquiry" which had so gladdened the colonel's heart the morning of the breakfast with Aunt Nancy had proceeded from this rotund negotiator.

The colonel had, as usual, started the road at Cartersville, and had gotten as far as the double-span iron bridge over the Tench when the rotund gentleman asked abruptly, —

"How far are you from a coal-field?"

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The colonel lifted the point of his pen, adjusted his glasses, and punched a hole in the rumpled map within a hair's breadth of a black dot labelled "Cartersville."

"Right there, suh. Within a stone's throw of our locomotives."

Fitz looked into the hole with as much astonishment as if it were the open mouth of the mine itself.

"Hard or soft?" said the stout man.

"Soft, suh, and fairly good coal, I understand, although I have never used it, suh; my ancestors always burned wood."

Fitz heard the statement in undisguised wonder. In all his intercourse with the colonel he had never before known him to depart so much as a razor's edge from the truth.

The fat man communed with himself a moment, and then said suddenly, "I'll take the papers and give you an answer in a week," and hurried away.

"Do you really mean, Colonel," said Fitz, determined to pin him down, "that there is a single pound of coal in Cartersville?"

"Do I mean it, Fitz? Don't it crop out in half a dozen spots right on our own place? One haalf of my estate, suh, is a coal-field."

"You never told me a word about it."

AN ALLUSION TO A YELLOW DOG

"I don't know that I did, Fitz. But it has never been of any use to me. Besides, suh, we have plenty of wood. We never burn coal at Caarter Hall."

Fitz did not take that view of it. He went into an exhaustive cross-examination of the colonel on the coal question : who had tested it, the character of the soil, width of the vein, and dip of the land. This information he carefully recorded in a small book which he took from his inside pocket.

Loosened from Fitz's pinioning grasp, the colonel, entirely oblivious to his friend's sudden interest in the coal-field, and slightly impatient at the delay, bounded like a balloon with its anchors cut.

"An answer from the syndicate within a week ! My dear Fitz, I see yo' drift. You have kept the Garden Spots for the foreign investors. That man is impressed, suh ; I saw it in his eye."

The room began filling up with the various customers and loungers common to such offices : the debonair gentleman in check trousers and silk hat, with a rose in his buttonhole, who dusts his trousers broadside with his cane, — short of one hundred shares with thirty per cent. margin ; the shabby old man with a solemn face who watches the ticker a moment and then wanders aimlessly out, looking more like an underpaid clerk in a law office than the president of a crosstown railroad, — long of one thousand shares with no margin at all ; the nervous man who stops the messenger boys and devours the sales lists before they can be skewered on the files, — not a dollar's interest either way ; and, last of all, the brokers with little pads and nimble pencils.

The news that the great English syndicate was looking into the C. & W. A. L. R. R. was soon around the office, and each habitué had a bright word for the colonel, congratulating him on the favorable turn his affairs had taken.

All but old Klutchem, a broker in unlisted securities, who had been trying for weeks to get a Denver land scheme before the same syndicate, and had failed.

“Garden Spot bonds ! Bosh ! Road begins nowhere and ends nowhere. If any set of fools built it, the only freight it would get, outside of peanuts and sweet potatoes, would be razor-back hogs and niggers. I would n't give a yellow dog for enough of those securities to paper a church.”

The colonel was on his feet in an instant.

“Mr. Klutchem, I cannot permit you, suh, to use such language in my presence unrebuked ;

AN ALLUSION TO A YELLOW DOG

you ” —

“ Now, see here, old Garden Spot, you know ” —

The familiarity angered the colonel even more than the outburst.

“ Caarter, suh, — George Fairfax Caarter,” said the colonel with dignity.

“ Well, Caarter, then,” mimicking him, perhaps unconsciously. “ You know ” —

The intonation was the last straw. The colonel lost all control of himself. No man had ever thus dared before.

“ Stop, Mr. Klutchem ! What I know, suh, I decline to discuss with you. Yo’ statements are false, and yo’ manner of expressin’ them quite in keepin’ with the evident vulga’ity of yo’ mind. If I can ascertain that you have ever had any claim to be considered a gentleman you will hear from me ag’in. If not, I shall rate you as rankin’ with yo’ yallar dog ; and if you ever speak to me ag’in I will strike you, suh, with my cane.”

And the colonel, his eyes flashing, strode into the private office with the air of a field marshal, and shut the door.

Klutchem looked around the room and into the startled faces of the clerks and bystanders, burst into a loud laugh, and left the office. On reaching the street he met Fitz coming in.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“Better look after old Garden Spot, Fitzpatrick. I poked holes in his road, and he wanted to swallow me alive.”

CERTAIN IMPORTANT LETTERS

WHEN I reached my lodgings that night I found this note, marked in the left-hand corner "Important," and in the right-hand corner "In haste." A boy had left it half an hour before.

Be at my house at six, prepared to leave at an hour's notice.

CARTER.

I hurried to Bedford Place, dived through the tunnel, and found Fitzpatrick with his hand on the knocker. I followed him through the narrow hall and into the dining-room. He had a duplicate, also marked "Important" and "In haste," with this additional postscript: "Bring address of a prudent doctor."

"What does all this mean, Fitz?" I asked, spreading my letter out.

"I give it up, Major. The last I saw of the colonel was at two o'clock. He was then in the private office, writing. That old wind-bag Klutchem had been worrying him, I heard, and the colonel sat down on him hard. But he had forgotten all about it when I talked to him, for he was as calm as a clock. But what the devil, Major, does he want with a doctor? Chad!"

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

"Yes, sah!"

"Was the colonel sick this morning?"

"No, sah. Eat two b'iled eggs, and a dish ob ham half as big as yo' han'. He wa'n't sick, 'cause I yerd him singin' to hisself all fru de tunnel cl'ar out to de street."

We sat down and looked at each other. Could anybody else be sick? Perhaps Aunt Nancy had been taken ill on her way home to Virginia, and the doctor was for the dear lady. But why a "prudent doctor," and why both of us to go?

Fitz paced up and down the room, and I sat by the open window, and looked out into the dreary yard. The hands of the clock in the tall tower outlined against the evening sky were past the hour, long past, and yet no colonel.

Suppose he had been suddenly stricken down himself! Suppose —

The slamming of the outer gate, followed by a sentry-like tread in the tunnel, cut short our quandary, and the colonel's tall figure emerged from the archway, and mounted the steps.

CERTAIN IMPORTANT LETTERS

“What has happened?” we both blurted out, opening the door for him. “Who’s sick? Where are we going?”

The colonel’s only reply was a pressure of our hands. Then, placing his hat with great deliberation on the hall table, he drew off his gloves, waved us before him, and took his seat at the dining-room table.

Fitz and I, now thoroughly alarmed, and quite prepared for the worst, stood on each side.

The colonel dropped his hand into his inside pocket, and drew forth three letters.

“Gentlemen, you see befo’ you a man on the verge of one of the great crises of his life. You heard, Fitz, of what occurred in my office this mornin’? You know how brutally I was insulted, and how entirely without provocation on my part? I am a Caarter, suh, and a gentleman. No man can throw discredit on an enterprise bearin’ my name without bein’ answerable to me.” And the colonel with great dignity opened one of the letters, and read as follows:—

NO. 51 BEDFORD PLACE,
Tuesday.

P. A. KLUTCHEM.

Sir,—You took occasion this morning, in the presence of a number of my friends, to make use of certain offensive remarks reflecting upon a great commercial enterprise to which I have lent my name. This was accompanied by a familiarity as coarse as it was unwarranted. The laws of hospitality, which your own lack of good breeding violated, forbade my having you ejected from my office on the spot.

I now demand that satisfaction to which I am entitled, and I herewith inform you that I am ready at an hour's notice to meet you at any point outside the city most convenient to yourself.

Immediately upon your reply my friend Mr. T. B. Fitzpatrick will wait upon you and arrange the details. I name Major Thos. C. Yancey of Virginia as my second in the field.

I have the honor to remain

Your obedient servant,
GEORGE FAIRFAX CARTER,
Late Colonel C. S. A.

"Suffering Moses!" cried out Fitz. "You are not going to send that?"

"It is sent, my dear Fitz. Mailed from my office this afternoon. This is a copy."

Fitz sank into a chair with both hands to his head.

"My object in sendin' for you both," the colonel continued, "was to be fully prepared should my antagonist select some early hour in the mornin'. In that case, Fitz, I shall have to rely on you alone, as Major Yancey cannot reach here until the followin' day. That was why a prudent doctor might be necessary at once."

Fitz's only reply was to thump his own head, as if the situation was too overpowering for words.

The colonel, with the same deliberation, opened the second letter. It was addressed to Judge Kerfoot, informing him of the nature of the "crisis," and notifying him of his (the colonel's) intention to appoint him sole executor of his estate should fate provide that vacancy.

The third was a telegram to Major Yancey, summoning him at once "to duty on the field in an affair of honor."

"I am aware, Fitz, that some secrecy must be preserved in an affair of this kind Nawth — quite diffe'ent from our own county, and" —

"Secrecy! Secrecy! With that bellowing Klutchem? Don't you know that that idiot will have it all over the Street by nine o'clock to-morrow, unless he is ass enough to get scared, get out a warrant, and clap you into the Tombs before breakfast? Oh, Colonel! How could you do a thing like this without letting us know?"

The colonel never changed a muscle in his face. He was courteous, even patient with Fitz, now really alarmed over the consequences of what he considered a most stupendous piece of folly. He could not, he said, sit in judgment on other gentlemen. If Fitz felt that way, it was doubtless due to his education. As for himself, he must follow the traditions of his ancestors.

"But at all events, my friends, my dear friends," — and he extended both hands, — "we must not let this affair spoil our ap'tites. Nothing can now occur until the mornin', and we have ample time befo' daylight to make our preparations. Major, kindly touch the bell. Thank you! Chad, serve the soup."

So short a time elapsed between the sound of the bell and the thrusting in of Chad's head that it was quite evident the darky had been listening on the outside.

If, however, that worthy guardian of the honor and dignity of the Carter family was at all disturbed by what he had heard, there was nothing in his face to indicate it. On the contrary, every wrinkle was twisted into curls and curves of hilarity. He even went so far during dinner as to correct his master in so slight a detail as where Captain Loynes was hit in the famous duel between the colonel's father and that distinguished Virginian.

"Are you shore, Chad, it was in the leg?"

"Yes, sah, berry sho. You don't recklemember, Colonel; but I had Marsa John's coat, an' I wrop it round Cap'in Loynes when he was ca'aied to his ca'aige. Yes, sah, jes above de knee. Marsa John picked him de fust shot."

"I remember now. Yes, you are right. The captain always walked a little lame.

"But, gentlemen," —still with great dignity, but yet with an air as if he desired to relieve our minds from any anxiety concerning himself, — "by far the most interesting affair of honor of my time was the one in which I met Major Howard, a prominent member of the Fairfax County bar. Some words in the heat of debate led to a blow, and the next mornin' the handkerchief was dropped at the edge of a wood near the cote-house just as the sun rose over the hill. As I fired, the light blinded me, and my ball passed through his left arm. I escaped with a hole in my sleeve."

"Living yet?" asked Fitz, repressing a smile.

"Certainly, suh, and one of the fo'most lawyers of our State. Vehy good friend of mine. Saw him on'y the week befo' I left home."

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

When dinner was served, I could detect no falling off in the colonel's appetite. With the exception of a certain nervous expectance, intensified when there was a rap at the front door, followed by a certain consequent disappointment when Chad announced the return of a pair of shoes — out to be half-soled — instead of the long-delayed reply from the offending broker, he was as calm and collected as ever.

It was only when he took from his table drawer some sheets of foolscap, spread the nib of a quill pen on his thumb-nail, and beckoned Fitz to his side, that I noticed any difference even in his voice.

"You know, Fitz, that my hand is not so steady as it was, and if I should fall, there are some things that must be attended to. Sit here and write these memoranda at my dictation."

Fitz drew nearer, and bent his ear in attention.

"I, George Fairfax Caarter of Caarter Hall, Caartersville, Virginia, bein' of sound mind " —
The pen scratched away.

"Everything down but the sound mind," said Fitz; "but go on."

"Do hereby," continued the colonel.

"What's all this for — another challenge?" said Fitz, looking up.

CERTAIN IMPORTANT LETTERS

"No, Fitz," — the colonel did not like his tone, — "but a few partin' instructions which will answer in place of a more formally drawn will."

Fitz scratched on until the preamble was finished, and the unincumbered half of Carter Hall had been bequeathed to "my ever valued aunt, Ann Carter, spinster," and he had reached a new paragraph beginning with, "All bonds, stocks, and shares, whether founders', preferred, or common, of the corporation known as the Cartersville and Warrentown Air Line Railroad, particularly the sum of 25,000 shares of said company subscribed for by the undersigned, I hereby bequeath," when Fitz stopped and laid down his pen.

"You can't leave that stock. Not transferred to you yet."

"I know it, Fitz; but I have pledged my word to take it, and so far as I am concerned, it is mine."

Fitz looked over his glasses at me, and completed the sentence by which this also became "the exclusive property of Ann Carter, spinster." Then followed a clause giving his clothes to Chad, his seal and chain to Fitz, and his fowling-piece to me.

When the document was finished, the colonel signed it in a bold, round hand, and attested it by a burning puddle of red wax into which he plunged the old family seal. Fitz and I duly witnessed it, and then the colonel, with the air of a man whose mind had been suddenly relieved of some great pressure, locked the important document in his drawer, and handed the key to Fitz.

The change now in the colonel's manner was quite in keeping with the expression of his face. All his severe dignity, all the excess of responsibility and apparent studied calmness, were gone. He even became buoyant enough to light a pipe.

Presently he gave a little start, as if suddenly remembering something until that moment overlooked; then he lighted a candle, and mounted the stairs to his bedroom. In a few minutes he returned, carrying in both hands a mysterious-looking box. This he placed with great care on the table, and proceeded to unlock with a miniature key attached to a bunch which he invariably carried in his trousers pocket.

It was a square box made of mahogany, bound at each corner with brass, and bearing in the centre of the top a lozenge-shaped silver tablet engraved with the Carter coat of arms, the letters "G. F. C." being beneath.

CERTAIN IMPORTANT LETTERS

The colonel raised the lid and uncovered the weapons that had defended the honor of the Carter family for two generations. They were the old-fashioned single-barrel kind, with butts like those of the pirates in a play, and they lay in a bed of faded red velvet surrounded by ram-rods, bullet-moulds, a green pill-box labelled "G. D. Gun Caps," some scraps of wash leather, together with a copper powder-flask and a spoonful of bullets. The nipples were protected by little patches cut from an old kid glove.

The colonel showed with great pride a dent on one side of the barrel where a ball had glanced, saving some ancestor's life ; then he rang the bell for Chad, and consigned the case to that hilarious ducky, very much as the knight of a castle would place his trusty blade in the hands of his chief armorer.

"Want a tech o' ile in dese baals, Colonel," said Chad, examining them critically. "Got to keep dere moufs clean if you want dese dogs to bark right ;" and he bore away the battery, followed by the colonel, who went down into the kitchen to see if the fire was hot enough to cast a few extra bullets.

Fitz and I, being more concerned about devising some method to prevent the consequences of the colonel's rash act than in increasing the facilities for bloodshed, remained where we were and discussed the possible outcome of the situation.

We had about agreed that should Klutchem demand protection of the police, and the colonel be hauled up for violating the law of the State, I should go bail and Fitz employ the lawyer, when we were startled by a sound like the snap of a percussion cap, followed by loud talking in the front yard.

First came a voice in a commanding tone :
"Stand where you are ! Drop yo' hand !"

Then Chad's "Don't shoot yit, Colonel."

Fitz and I started for the front door on a run, threw it open, and ran against Chad standing on the top step with his back to the panels. Over his head he held the stub of a candle flickering in the night wind. This he moved up and down in obedience to certain mysterious sounds which came rumbling out of the tunnel. Beside him on the stone step lay the brass-cornered mahogany duelling case, with both weapons gone.

The only other light visible was the glowing eye of the tall tower.

"Where 's the colonel ?" we both asked in a breath.

an ebony Statue of Liberty, and pointed straight ahead into the tunnel with the other.

Chad swayed the candle towards the broken-down fence, and sent his magnified shadow scurrying up the measly wall and halfway over to the next house.

“So ! Now steady.”

The darky stood like the Sphinx, the light streaming atop of the tall candlestick, and then said from out one side of his mouth, “Spec’ you gemmen better squat ; she’s gwine to bite.”

Fitz peered into the tunnel, caught the gleam of a pistol held in a shadowy hand, made a clear leap, and landed out of range among the broken flower-pots. I sprang behind the hydrant, and at the same instant another cap snapped.

“Ah, gentlemen,” said the voice emerging from the tunnel, “had I been quite sure of myself I should have sent for you. I used to snuff a candle at fo’ty yards, and but that my powder is a little old I could do it ag’in.”

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

WHEN early the next morning, Fitz and I arrived at the colonel's office, he was already on hand and in a state of high nervous excitement. His coat, which, so far as a coat might, always expressed in its various combinations the condition of his mind, was buttoned close up under his chin, giving to his slender figure quite a military air. He was pacing the floor with measured tread ; one hand thrust into his bosom, senator fashion, the other held behind his back.

"Not a line, suh ; not the scrape of a pen. If his purpose, suh, is to ignore me altogether, I shall horsewhip him on sight."

"Have you looked through the firm's mail ?" remarked Fitz, glad of the respite.

"Eve'ywhere, suh — not a scrap."

"I will hunt him up ;" and Fitz hurried down to Klutchem's office in the hope of either intercepting the challenge or of pacifying the object of the colonel's wrath, if by any good chance the letter should have been delayed until the morning.

In ten minutes he returned with the mystifying news that Mr. Klutchem's letters had been sent to his apartment the night before, and that a telegram had just been received notifying his clerks that he would not be down that day.

"Escaped, suh, has he? Run like a dog! Like a yaller dog as he is! Where has he gone?"

"After a policeman, I guess," ventured Fitz.

The colonel stopped, and an expression of profound contempt overspread his face.

"If the gentleman has fallen so low, suh, that he proposes to go about with a constable taggin' after his heels, you can tell him, suh, that he is safe even from my boot."

Then he shut the door of the private office in undisguised disgust, leaving Fitz and me on the outside.

"What are we going to do, Major?" inquired Fitz, now really anxious. "I am positive that old Klutchem has either left town or is at this moment at police headquarters. If so, the dear old fellow will be locked up before sundown. Klutchem got that letter last night."

It was at once decided to head off the broker,

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Fitz keeping an eye on his office every half hour in the hope that he might turn up, and I completing the arrangements for the colonel's bail so as to forestall the possibility of his remaining in custody overnight.

Fitz spent the day in efforts to lay hands on Klutchem in order to prevent the law performing the same service for the colonel. My own arrangements were more easily completed, a friend properly possessed of sufficient real estate to make good his bond being in readiness for any emergency. One o'clock came, then three, then five ; the colonel all the time keeping to the seclusion of his private office, Fitz watching for Klutchem, and I waiting in the larger office for the arrival of one of those clean-shaven, thick-set young men, in a Derby hat and sack-coat, the unexpected pair of handcuffs in his outside pocket.

The morning of the second day the situation remained still unchanged ; Fitz had been unable to find Klutchem either at his office or at his lodgings, the colonel was still without any reply from his antagonist, and no young man answering to my fears had put in any appearance whatever.

The only new features were a telegram from Tom Yancey to the effect that he and Judge

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

Kerfoot would arrive about noon, and another from the judge himself begging a postponement until they could reach the field.

Fitz read both dispatches in a corner by himself, with a face expressive of the effect these combined troubles were making upon his otherwise happy countenance. He then crumpled them up in his hand and slid them into his pocket.

Up to this time not a soul in the office except the colonel, Fitz, and I had the faintest hint of the impending tragedy, it being one of the colonel's maxims that all affairs of honor demanded absolute silence.

"If yo' enemy falls," he would say, "it is mo' co'teous to say nothin' but good of the dead; and when you cannot say that, better keep still. If he is alive let him do the talkin' — he will soon kill himself."

Fitz kept still because he felt sure if he could get hold of Klutchem the whole affair — either outcome, powder or law — could be prevented.

"Just as I had got the syndicate to look into the coal land," said Fitz, "which is the only thing the colonel's got worth talking about, here he goes and gets into a first-class cast-iron scrape like this. What a lovely old idiot he is! But I tell you, Major, something has got to be done about this shooting business right away ! Here I have arranged for a meeting at the colonel's house on Saturday to discuss this new coal development, and the syndicate's agent is coming, and yet we can't for the life of us tell whether the colonel will be on his way home in a pine box or locked up here for trying to murder that old wind-bag. It's horrible !

“ And to cap the climax,” —and he pulled out the crumpled telegrams, — “ here come a gang of fire-eaters who will make it twice as difficult for me to settle anything. I wish I could find Klutchem ! ”

While he spoke the office door opened, ushering in a stout man with a red face, accompanied by an elderly, white-haired gentleman, in a butternut suit. The red-faced man was carrying a carpet bag — not the Northern variety of wagon-curtain canvas, but the old-fashioned carpet kind, with leather handles and a mouth like a catfish. The snuff-colored gentleman's only charge was a heavy hickory cane and an umbrella with a waist like a marketwoman's.

The red-faced man took off a wide straw hat and uncovered a head slightly bald and reeking with perspiration.

“ I'm lookin' fur Colonel Caarter, suh. Is he in ? ”

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

Fitz pointed to the door of the private office, and the elderly man drew his cane and rapped twice. The colonel must have recognized the signal as familiar, for the door opened with a spring, and the next moment he had them both by the hands.

“Why, Jedge, this is indeed an honor — and Tom! Of co’sse I knew you would come, Tom; but the jedge I did not expec’ until I got yo’ telegram. Give me yo’ bag, and put yo’ umbrella in the corner.

“Here Fitz, Major! both of you come in here at once!

“Jedge Kerfoot, gentlemen, of the district co’tte of Fairfax County. Major Tom Yancey, of the army.”

The civilities over, extra chairs were brought in, the door again closed, and a council of war was held.

Major Yancey’s first word — but I must describe Yancey. Imagine a short, oily-skinned, perpetually perspiring sort of man of forty, with a décolleté collar, a double-breasted waistcoat with glass buttons, and skin-tight light trousers held down to a pair of high-heeled boots by leather straps. The space between his waistband and his waistcoat was made good by certain puckerings of his shirt, anxious to escape the thraldom of his suspenders. His paunch began and ended so suddenly that he constantly reminded you of a man who had swallowed a toy balloon.

Yancey's first word was an anxious inquiry as to whether he was late, adding, "I came ez soon ez I could settle some business mattahs." He had borrowed his travelling expenses from Kerfoot, who in turn had borrowed them from Miss Nancy, keeping the impending duel carefully concealed from that dear lady, and reading only such part of the colonel's letter as referred to the drawing up of some important papers in which he was to figure as chief executor.

"Late? No, Tom," said the colonel; "but the scoundrel has run to cover. We are watch-in' his hole."

"You sholy don't tell me he's got away, Colonel?" replied Major Yancey.

"What could I do, Yancey? He has n't had the decency to answer my letter."

Yancey, however, on hearing more fully the facts, clung to the hope that the Yankee would yet be smoked out.

"I of co'se am not familiar with the code as practised Nawth—perhaps these delays are permis'ble; but in my county a challenge is a ball, and a man is killed or wounded ez soon ez the ink is dry on the papah. The time he has to live is only a mattah of muddy roads or convenience of seconds. Is there no way in which this can be fixed? I doan't like to return home without an effo't bein' made."

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

The colonel, anxious to place the exact situation before Major Yancey, so that he might go back fully assured that everything that a Carter could do had been done, read the copy of the challenge, gave the details of Fitz's efforts to find Klutchem, the repeated visits to his office, and finally the call at his apartments.

The major listened attentively, consulted aside with the judge, and then in an authoritative tone, made the more impressive by the decided way with which he hitched up his trousers, said, —

"You have done all that a high-toned Southern gemman could do, Colonel. Yo' honor, suh, is without a stain."

In which opinion he was sustained by Kerfoot, who proved to be a ponderous sort of old-fashioned county judge, and who accentuated his decision by bringing down his cane with a bang.

While all this was going on in the private office under cover of profound secrecy, another sort of consultation of a much more public character was being held in the office outside.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

A very bright young man, one of the clerks, held in his hand a large envelope, bearing on one end the printed address of the firm whose private office the colonel was at that moment occupying as a council chamber. It was addressed in the colonel's well-known round hand. This was not the fact, however, which excited interest, for the colonel never used any other envelopes than those of the firm.

The postman, who had just taken it from his bag, wanted to deliver it at its destination. The proprietor wanted to throw it back into the box for remailing, believing it to be a Garden Spot circular, and so of no especial importance. The bright young man wanted to return it to the colonel.

The bright young man prevailed, rapped at the door, and laid the letter under the colonel's nose. It bore this address: —

P. A. Klutchem, Esq.,

Room 21, Star Building, Wall Street,

Immediate.

New York.

The colonel turned pale and broke the seal. Out dropped his challenge!

"Where did you get this?" he asked, aghast.

"From the carrier. It was held for postage."

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

Had a bombshell been exploded the effect could not have been more startling.

Yancey was the first man on his feet.

“And the scoundrel never got it! Here, Colonel, give me the letter. I’ll go through this town like a fine-tooth comb but what I’ll find him. He will never escape me. My name is Yancey, suh!”

The judge was more conservative. He had grave doubts as to whether a second challenge, after a delay of two days and two nights, could be sent at all. The traditions of the Carter family were a word and a blow, not a blow and a word in two days. To intrust the letter to the United States mail was a grave mistake; the colonel might have known that it would miscarry.

Fitz said grimly that letters always did, without stamps. The government was running the post-office on a business basis, not for its health.

Yancey looked at Fitz as if the interruption wearied him, then, turning to the colonel, said that he was dumfounded that a man who had been raised as Colonel Carter could have violated so plain a rule of the code. A challenge should always be delivered by the hand of the challenger’s friend. It should never be mailed.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The poor colonel, who since the discovery of the unstamped letter had sat in a heap buried in his coat collar, — the military button having given way, — now gave his version of the mis-carriage.

He began by saying that when his friend Major Yancey became conversant with all the facts he would be more lenient with him. He had, he said, found the proprietor's drawer locked, and, not having a stamp about him, had dropped the document into the mail-box with the firm's letters, presuming that the clerks would affix the tax the government imposed. That the document had reached the post-office was evidenced by the date-stamp on the envelope. It seemed to him a picayune piece of business on the part of the authorities to detain it, and all for the paltry sum of two cents.

Major Yancey conferred with the judge for a moment, and then said that the colonel's explanation had relieved him of all responsibility. He owed him a humble apology, and he shook his hand. Colonel Carter had done all that a high-bred gentleman could do. The letter was intrusted to the care of Mr. Klutchem's own government, the post-office as now conducted being peculiarly a Yankee institution.

“If Mr. Klutchem's own government, gem-

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

men," — and he repeated it with a rising voice, — "if Mr. Klutchem's own government does not trust him enough to deliver to him a letter in advance of a payment of two cents, such action, while highly discreditable to Mr. Klutchem, certainly does not relieve that gemman from the responsibility of answerin' Colonel Caarter."

The colonel said the point was well taken, and the judge sustained him.

Yancey looked around with the air of a country lawyer who had tripped up a witness, decorated a corner of the carpet, and continued, —

"My idee, suh, now that I am on the ground, is for me to wait upon the gemman at once, hand him the orig'nal challenge, and demand an immediate answer. That is," turning to Fitz, "unless he is in hidin'."

Fitz replied that it was pretty clear to him that a man could not hide from a challenge he had never received. It was quite evident that Klutchem was detained somewhere.

The colonel coincided, and said in justice to his antagonist that he would have to acquit him of this charge. He did not now believe that Mr. Klutchem had run away.

Fitz, who up to this time had enjoyed every turn in the discussion, and who had listened to Yancey with a face like a stone god, his knees shaking with laughter, now threw another bomb-shell almost as disastrous as the first.

"Besides, gentlemen, I don't think Mr. Klutchem's remarks were insulting."

The colonel's head rose out of his collar with a jerk, and the forelegs of Yancey's chair struck the floor with a thump. Both sprang to their feet. The judge and I remained quiet.

"Not insultin', suh, to call a gemman a — a — Colonel, what did the scoundrel call you?"

"It was mo' his manner," replied the colonel. "He was familiar, suh, and presumin' and offensive."

Yancey broke away again, but Fitz side-tracked him with a gesture, and asked the colonel to repeat Klutchem's exact words.

The colonel gazed at the ceiling a moment, and replied, —

"Mr. Klutchem said that, outside of peanuts and sweet potatoes, all my road would git for freight would be niggers and razor-back hogs."

"Mr. Klutchem was right, Colonel," said Fitz. "Very sensible man. They will form a very large part of our freight. Anything offensive in that remark of Klutchem's, Major Yancey?"

The major conferred with the judge, and said reluctantly that there was not.

“Then, suh, he said he would n’t trade a yaller dog for enough of our bonds to papah a meetin’-house.”

“Did he call you a yaller dog?” said Yancey searchingly, and straightening himself up.

“No.”

“Call anybody connected with you a yaller dog?”

“Can’t say that he did.”

“Call yo’ railroad a yaller dog?”

“No, don’t think so,” said the colonel, now thoroughly confused and adrift.

Yancey consulted with the judge a moment in one corner, and then said gravely, —

“Unless some mo’ direct insult is stated, Colonel, we must agree with yo’ friend Mr. Fitzpatrick, and consider yo’ action hasty. Now, if you had pressed the gemman, and he had called you a yaller dog or a liar, somethin’ might be done. Why did n’t you press him?”

“I did, suh. I told him his statements were false and his manners vulgar.”

“And he did not talk back?”

“No, suh; on’y laughed.”

“Sneeringly, and in a way that sounded like ‘Yo’ ’re another’?”

The colonel could not remember that it was.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Yancey ruminated, and Fitz now took a hand.

“On the contrary, Major Yancey, Mr. Klutchem’s laugh was no doubt a very jolly laugh; and, under the circumstances, a laugh very creditable to his good nature. You are young and impetuous, but I know my learned friend, Judge Kerfoot, will agree with me” — here Yancey patted his toy balloon complacently, and the judge leaned forward with rapt attention — “when I say that if any apologies are in order they should not come from Mr. Klutchem.”

It was delicious to note how easily Fitz fell into the oratorical method of his hearers.

“Here is a man immersed in stocks, and totally ignorant of the boundless resources of your State, who limits the freight of our road to four staples, — peanuts, hogs, sweet potatoes, and niggers. As a further exhibition of his ignorance he estimates the value of a large block of our securities as far below the price set upon a light, tan-colored canine, a very inexpensive animal, — or as he puts it, and perhaps too coarsely, a yellow dog. For the expression of these financial opinions in an open office during business hours he is set upon, threatened with expulsion, and finally challenged to a mortal duel. I ask you, as chivalric Virginians, is this right?”

THE OUTCOME OF A COUNCIL OF WAR

Yancey was about to answer, when the judge raised his hand impressively.

“ The co'te, not being familiar with the practice of this section, can on'y decide the question in acco'dance with the practice of his own county. The language used is not objectionable, either under the law or by the code. The prisoner, Klutchem, is discharged with a reprimand, and the plaintiff, Caarter, leaves the co'te room without a stain on his cha'acter. The co'te will now take a recess.”

Fitz listened with great gravity to the decision of the learned judge, bowed to him with the pleased deference of the winning attorney, grasped the colonel's hand, and congratulated him warmly on his acquittal.

Then, locking his arm through Yancey's, he conducted that pugnacious but parched Virginian, together with the overworked judge, out into the street, down a flight of stone steps, and into an underground apartment ; from which they all emerged later with that satisfied, cheerful air peculiar to a group of men who have slaked their thirst.

The colonel and I remained behind. He was in no mood for such frivolity.

VIII

A HIGH SENSE OF HONOR

WHILE the judge's decision had relieved the colonel of all responsibility so far as Yancey and Cartersville were concerned, — and Yancey would be Cartersville when he was back at the tavern stove, — there was one person it had not satisfied, and that was the colonel himself.

He began pacing the floor, recounting for my benefit the various courtesies he had received since he had lived at the North, — not only from the proprietors of the office, but from every one of its frequenters. And yet after all these civilities he had so far forgotten himself as to challenge a friend of his host, a very worthy gentleman, who, although a trifle brusque in his way of putting things, was still an open-hearted man. And all because he differed with him on a matter of finance.

“The mo' I think of it, Major, the mo' I am overwhelmed by my action. It was inconsiderate, suh. It was uncalled for, suh; and I am afraid," and here he lowered his voice, "it was ill-bred and vulgar. What could those gentlemen who stood by have thought? They have all been so good to me, Major! I have betrayed their hospitality. I have forgotten my blood, suh. There is certainly an apology due Mr. Klutchem."

At this juncture Fitz returned, followed by Yancey, who was beaming all over, the judge bringing up the rear.

All three listened attentively.

"Who's goin to apologize?" said Yancey, shifting his thumbs from his armholes to the side pockets of his vest, from which he pinched up some shreds of tobacco.

"I am, suh!" replied the colonel.

"What for, Colonel?" The doctrine was new to Yancey.

"For my own sense of honor, suh!"

"But he never got the challenge."

"That makes no diff'ence, suh. I wrote it." And the colonel threw his head up, and looked Major Yancey straight in the eye.

"But, Colonel, we've got the letter, — Klutchem don't know a word about it."

"But I do, Major Yancey; and so do you and Fitz and the jedge and the Major here. We all know it. Do you suppose, suh, for one instant, that I am cowardly enough to stab a man in the back this way and give him no chance of defendin' himself? It is monst'ous, suh! Why, suh, it's no better than insultin' a deaf man, and then tryin' to escape because he did not hear you. I tell you, suh, I shall apologize. Fitz, kindly inquire outside if there is any news of Mr. Klutchem."

Fitz opened the door, and sent the inquiry ringing through the office.

"Yes!" came a voice from around the "ticker." "Went to the races two days ago, got soaking wet, and has been laid up ever since at a friend's house with the worst attack of gout he ever had in his life."

The colonel started as if he had been stung, put on his hat, and with a determined air buttoned his coat over his chest. Then, charging Yancey and the judge not to leave the office until he returned, he beckoned Fitz to him, and said:—

"We have not a moment to lose. Get Mr. Klutchem's address, and order a caarriage."

It was the custom with Fitz never to cross the colonel in any one of his sudden whims. Whether this was because he liked to indulge him, or because it gave him an opportunity to study a type of man entirely new to him, the result was always the same, — the colonel had his way. Had the Virginian insisted upon waiting on the offending broker in a palanquin or upon the top of a four-in-hand, Fitz would have found the vehicle somehow, and have crawled in or on top beside him with as much complacency as if he had spent his whole life with palanquins and coaches, and had had no other interests. So when the order came for the carriage, Fitz winked at me with his left eye, walked to the sidewalk, whistled to a string of cabs, and the next instant we were all three whirling up the crowded street in search of the bedridden broker.

The longer the colonel brooded over the situation the more he was satisfied with the idea of the apology. Indeed, before he had turned down the side street leading to the temporary hospital of the suffering man, he had arranged in his mind just where the ceremony would take place, and just how he would frame his opening sentence. He was glad, too, that Klutchem had been discovered so soon, while Yancey and Kerfoot were still in town.

The colonel alighted first, ran up the steps, pulled the bell with the air of a doctor called to an important case, and sent his card to the first floor back.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“ Mr. Klutchem says, ‘ Walk up,’ ” said the maid.

The broker was in an armchair with his back to the door, only the top of his bald head being visible as we entered. On a stool in front rested a foot of enormous size swathed in bandages. Leaning against his chair were a pair of crutches. He was somewhat startled at the invasion, made as it was in the busiest part of the day.

“ What ’s up ? Anybody busted ? ”

Fitz assured him that the Street was in a state of the greatest tranquillity ; that the visit was purely personal, and made for the express purpose of offering Colonel Carter an opportunity of relieving his mind of a pressure which at the precise moment was greater than he could bear.

“ Out with it, old Garden — Colonel,” broke out Klutchem, catching himself in time, and apparently greatly relieved that the situation was no worse.

The colonel, who remained standing, bowed courteously, drew himself up with a dress-parade gesture, and recounted slowly and succinctly the incidents of the preceding three days.

When he arrived at the drawing-up of the challenge, Klutchem looked around curiously, gathered in his crutches with his well leg, — prepared for escape or defence, — and remained thus equipped until the colonel reached the secret consultation in the private office and the return of the unstamped letter. Then he toppled his supports over on the floor, and laughed until the pain in his elephantine foot bent him double.

A HIGH SENSE OF HONOR

The colonel paused until Klutchem had recovered himself, and then continued, his face still serene, and still expressive of a purpose so lofty that it excluded every other emotion.

“The return of my challenge unopened, suh, coupled with the broad views of my distinguished friends Mr. Fitzpatrick and the Major, — both personal friends of yo’ own, I believe, — and the calmer reflection of my own mind, have convinced me, Mr. Klutchem, that I have been hasty and have done you a wrong; and, suh, rememberin’ my blood, I have left the cares of my office for a brief moment, to call upon you at once, and tell you so. I regret, suh, that you have not the use of both yo’ legs, but I have anticipated that difficulty. My caarriage is outside.”

“Don’t mention it, Colonel. You never grazed me. If you want to plaster that syndicate all over with Garden Spots, go ahead. I won’t say a word. There ’s my hand.”

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The colonel never altered a line in his face nor moved a muscle of his body. Mr. Klutchem's hand remained suspended in mid-air.

"Yo' action is creditable to yo' heart, suh, but you know, of cou'se, that I cannot take yo' hand here. I insulted you in a public office, and in the presence of yo' friends and of mine, some of whom are at this moment awaitin' our return. I feel assured, suh, that under the circumstances you will make an effort, however painful it may be to you, to relieve me from this stain on my cha'acter. Allow me to offer you my arm, and help you to my caarriage, suh. I will not detain you mo' than an hour."

Klutchem looked at him in perfect astonishment.

"What for ? "

The colonel's color rose.

"That this matter may be settled properly, suh. I insulted you publicly in my office. I wish to apologize in the same way. It is my right, suh."

"But I can't walk. Look at that foot, — big as a hatbox."

"My friends will assist you, suh. I will carry yo' crutches myself. Consider my situation. You surely, as a man of honor, will not refuse me this, Mr. Klutchem ? "

A HIGH SENSE OF HONOR

The colonel's eyes began to snap, and Fitz edged round to pour oil when the wind freshened. Klutchem's temper was also on the move.

"Get out of this chair with that mush poultice," pointing to his foot, "and have you cart me down to Wall Street to tell me you are sorry you did n't murder me ! What do you take me for ? "

The colonel's eyes now fairly blazed, and his voice trembled with suppressed anger.

"I did take you, suh, for a gentleman. I find I am mistaken. And you refuse to go, and " —

"Yes ! " roared Klutchem, his voice splitting the air like a tomahawk.

"Then, suh, let me tell you right here that if you do not get up now and get into my caarriage, whenever you can stand on yo' wuthless legs, I will thresh you so, suh, that you will never get up any mo'."

IX

A VISIT OF CEREMONY

THE Honorable I. B. Kerfoot, presiding judge of the district court of Fairfax County, Virginia, and the gallant Major Thomas C. Yancey, late of the Confederate army, had been the colonel's guests at his hospitable house in Bedford Place for a period of six days and six nights, when my cards — two — were given to Chad, together with my verbal hopes that both gentlemen were within.

My visit was made in conformity with one of the colonel's inflexible rules, — every guest under his roof, within one week of his arrival, was to be honored by a personal call from every friend within reach.

No excuse would have sufficed on the ground of flying visits. And indeed, so far as these particular birds of passage were concerned, the occupation was permanent, the judge having taken possession of the only shakedown sofa on the lower floor, and the warlike major having plumped himself into the middle of the colonel's own bed not ten minutes after his arrival. Even to the casual Northern eye, unaccustomed to the prolonged sedentary life of the average Virginian when a guest, there was every indication that these had come to stay.

Chad laid both of my cards on the table, and indulged in a pantomime more graphic than spoken word. He shut his eyes, laid his cheek on one hand, and gave a groan of intense disgust, followed by certain gleeful chuckles, made the more expressive by the sly jerking of his thumb towards the dining-room door and the bobbing up and down of his forefinger in the direction of the bedroom above.

“Bofe in. Yes, sah ! Bofe in, an’ bofe abed. Last I yerd from em’ dey was hollerin’ for juleps.”

I entered the dining-room and stopped short. On a low sofa at the far end of the room lay a man of more than ordinary girth, with coat, vest, and shoes off, his face concealed by a newspaper. From beneath this sheet came, at regular intervals, a long-drawn sound like the subdued puff of a tired locomotive at rest on a side track. Beside him was an empty tumbler, decorated with a broken straw and a spray of withered mint.

The summer air fanned through the closed blinds of the darkened room, and played with the silvery locks that straggled over the white pillow ; the paper rose and fell with a crinkling noise, keeping time to the rhythm of the exhaust. Beyond this there was no movement. The Hon. I. B. Kerfoot was asleep.

I watched the slowly heaving figure for a moment, picked up a chair, and gently closed the door. I could now look the colonel in the face so far as the judge was concerned. My account with the judge was settled.

Retiring to the yard outside, which was cool and shady, and, despite its dilapidated appearance, a grateful relief from the glare of the street, I tilted my chair against the dissipated wall, with its damaged complexion of scaling whitewash, and sat down to await the colonel's return.

Meanwhile Chad busied himself about the kitchen, moving in and out the basement door, and at last brought up a great tin pan, seated himself on the lower step, and proceeded to shell peas, indulging all the while in a running commentary on the events of the preceding week.

One charm in Chad's conversation was its clearness. You always absorbed his meaning. Another was its reliability. When he finished you had the situation in full.

A VISIT OF CEREMONY

First came the duel.

“So dat Ketchem man done got away ? Doan’ dat beat all ! An’ de colonel a-makin’ his will an’ a-rubbin’ up his old barkers ! Can’t have no fun yer naaway ; sumpin’ allers spiles it. But yer oughter seen de colonel dat day w’en he come home ! Sakes alive, warn’t he b’ilin’ ! Much as Jedge Keerfoot could do to keep him from killin’ dat Yankee on de street.”

Chad’s long brown fingers fumbled among the green pea-shells, which he heaped up on one side of the pan, and the conversation soon changed to his master’s “second in the field.” I encouraged this divergence, for I had been charged by Fitz to find out when these two recent additions to the household in Bedford Place intended returning to their native clime, — that loyal friend of the colonel being somewhat disturbed over their preparations for what promised to be a lengthy stay.

“’Fo’ de Lawd, I doan’ know ! Tom Yancey nebber go s’ long as de mint patch hol’ out, an’ de colonel bought putty near a ba’el ob it dis mawnin’, an’ anudder dimijohn from Mister Grocerman. Makes my blood bile to see dese Yanceys, anyhow. See dat carpet bag w’at he fotch wid him ? Know w’at he had in it w’en he opened its mouf an’ de jedge tuk his own clo'es outen it ? A pair ob carpet slippers, two collars, an' a lot ob chicken fixin's. Not a shirt to his back 'cept de one he had on ! Had to stay abed yisteddy till I i'oned it. Dar 's one ob his collars on de line now. Dese yer Yanceys no 'count no way. Beats de lan' how de colonel can put up wid 'em, 'cept his faader was quality. You know de old ginerall married twice, de las' time his oberseer's daughter. Dat 's her chile — Tom Yancey — 'sleep now on de colonel's bed upstairs wid a straw in his mouf like a shote. But de colonel say 't ain't Tom's fault dat he takes after his mammy ; he 's a Yancey, anyhow. But I tell you, Major, Miss Nancy doan' hab nuffin much to do wid 'im, — she can't abide 'im."

"How long are they going to stay, Chad ?" I asked, wishing to make a definite report to Fitz.

"Doan' know. Ole groun'-hog mighty comf'ble in de hole." And he heaped up another pile of shells.

"Fust night de jedge come he tol' de colonel dat Miss Nancy say we all got to come home when de month's up, railroad or no railroad. Dat was a week ago. Den de jedge tasted dat madary Mister Grocerman sent, an' I ain't yerd nuffin 'bout goin' home since. Is you yerd, Major ?”

A VISIT OF CEREMONY

Before I could answer, a shutter opened overhead and a voice came sifting down.

“ Oh Chad ! Mix me a julep. And Chad, bring an extra one for the colonel. I reckon he 'll be yer d'reckly.”

“ Yes, sah,” replied Chad, without lifting his eyes from the pan.

Then glancing up and finding the blind closed again, he said to me in a half whisper, —

“ Colonel get his julep when he ax fur it. I ain't caayin' no double drinks to nobody. Dis ain't no camp-meetin' bar.”

But Chad's training had been too thorough to permit of his refusing sustenance or attention to any guest of his master's, no matter how unworthy, and it was not many minutes before he was picking over “ de ba'el ” containing that peculiar pungent variety of plant so common to the graveyards of Virginia.

Before the cooling beverage had been surmounted by its delicate mouthpiece, the street gate opened and the colonel walked briskly in.

“ Ah, Major ! You here ? Jes the vehy man we wanted, suh ! Fitz and the English agent are comin' to dinner. You have heard the news, of co'se ? No ? Not about the great syndicate absorbin' the Garden Spots ? My dear suh, she 's floated ! The C. & W. A. L. R. R. is afloat, suh ! Proudly ridin' the waves of prosperity, suh. Wafted on by the breeze of success."

"What, bought the bonds ? " I said, jumping up.

"Well, not exactly bought them outright, for these gigantic operations are not conducted in that way ; but next to it, suh. To-day," and he brought his hand down softly on my shoulder, "to-day, suh, they have cabled their agent — the same gentleman, suh, you saw in my office some time ago — to make a searchin' investigation into the mineral and agricultural resources of that section of my State, with a view to extendin' its railroad system. I quote, suh, the exact words, 'extendin' its railroad system.' Think, my dear Major, of the effect that a colossal financial concern like the great British syndicate would produce upon Fairfax County, backed as it is, suh, by untold millions of stagnant capital absolutely rottin' in English banks ! The road is built ! " And the colonel in his excitement opened his waistcoat, and began pacing the yard, fanning himself vigorously with his hat.

A VISIT OF CEREMONY

Chad substituted a palm-leaf fan from the hall table, and, producing a small tray, picked up the frosted tumbler and mounted the three steps to relieve the thirsty guest on the floor above.

As he reached the last step a hand stretched out, and a voice said : —

“Jes what I wanted.”

“Dis julep, Jedge, is Major Yancey’s.”

“All the better.” And nodding to the colonel and bowing gravely to me, the Hon. I. B. Kerfoot settled himself on the top of the front steps with very much the same air with which he would have occupied his own judicial bench.

With the exception that this julep was just begun and the other just ended, his Honor presented precisely the same outward appearance as when I discovered him asleep on the sofa.

His was, in fact, the extremest limit of dishabille permissible even on the hottest of summer afternoons in the most retired of back yards, — no coat, no vest, no shoes. In one hand he held a crumpled collar and a high black silk stock; with the other he grasped the julep. His hair was tousled, his face shrivelled up and pinched by his heavy nap, his eyes watery and vague. He reminded me of the man one sometimes meets in the aisle of a sleeping-car when one boards the train at a way station in the night.

"I hope you have had a refreshin' sleep, Jedge," said the colonel. "My friend the Major here did himself and me the honor of callin' upon you, but findin' that you were restin', suh, he sought the cool of my co'teyard until you should awake."

His Honor looked at me over the edge of his tumbler and bowed feebly. The straw remained glued to his mouth.

"I have been tellin' him, suh, of the extr'o'd'nary boom to-day in Garden Spots, as some of my young friends call the secu'ities of my new road, work upon which will be begun next week."

The announcement made no impression upon the judge, his face remaining sleepily stolid until that peculiar gurgling sound, the death-rattle of a dying julep, caused a shade of sadness to pass over it.

At that instant the shutter again opened overhead.

"Hello, Colonel! Home, are you? Chad, where's my julep? Ah, Major, hope I see you veyh well, suh. Where's Kerfoot?"

That legal luminary craned his head forward as far as it would go without necessitating any additional movement of his body, caught Yancey's eye as he leaned out of the window, and held up the empty glass.

When everybody had stopped laughing, the colonel made a critical but silent examination of the judge, scanning carefully the crumpled shirt and tousled hair, lifted his eyes towards Yancey, and said gravely, and with a slight tone of rebuke in his voice, —

“Gentlemen, you will both have ample time to dress. We do not dine until seven.”

X

CHAD IN SEARCH OF A COAL-FIELD

THE colonel was the first man downstairs. When he entered I saw at a glance that it was one of his gala nights, for he wore the ceremonial white waistcoat and cravat, and had thrown the accommodating coat wide open. His hair, too, was brushed back from his broad forehead with more than usual care, each silver thread keeping its proper place in the general scheme of iron-gray ; while his goatee was twisted to so fine a point that it curled upward like a fish-hook. He had also changed his shoes, his white stockings now being incased in low prunellas tied with a fresh ribbon, which hung over the toes like the drooping ears of a lapdog.

The attention which the colonel paid to these particular details was due, as he frequently said, to his belief that a man, to be well dressed, must always look after his extremities.

“I can inva'iably, suh, detect the gentleman under the shabbiest suit of clothes, if his collar and stockings are clean. When, besides this, he brushes his hat and blacks his shoes, you may safely invite him to dinner."

Something like this was evidently passing in his mind as he stood waiting for his guests, his back to the empty grate ; for he examined his hands critically, glanced at his shoes, and then excusing himself, turned his face, and taking a pair of scissors from his pocket proceeded leisurely to trim his cuffs.

"These duties of the dressin'-room, my dear Major, should have been attended to in their proper place ; but the fact is, the jedge is makin' rather an elaborate toilet in honor of our guest, and as Yancey occupied my bedroom, and the jedge is also dressin' there, my own accommodations are limited. I feel sure you will excuse me."

While he spoke the door opened, and his Honor entered in a William Penn style of make-up, ruffled shirt and all. He really was not unlike that distinguished peacemaker, especially when he carried one of the colonel's long pipes in his mouth. He had, I am happy to say, since leaving the front steps, accumulated an increased amount of clothing. The upper part of the familiar butternut suit—the coat—still clung to him, but the middle and lower part had been supplanted by another waistcoat and trousers of faded nankeen, the first corrugated into wrinkles and the second flapping about his ankles.

The colonel absorbed him at a glance, and with a satisfied air placed a chair for him near the window and handed him a palm-leaf fan.

Last of all came Yancey in a flaming red necktie, — the only addition to his costume, — a part, no doubt, of the “chicken fixin’s” found by Chad in the carpet bag.

The breezy ex-major, as he entered, seized my hand with the warmth of a life-long friend; then moving over and encircling with his arm the colonel’s coat collar, he lowered his voice to a confidential whisper and inquired about the market of the day with as much solicitude as though his last million had been filched from him on insufficient security.

When, a few minutes later, the round-faced man, the agent of the great English syndicate, walked in, preceded by Fitz, nothing could have been more courtly than the way the colonel presented him to his guests, pausing at every name to recount some slight biographical detail complimentary to each, and ending by announcing with great dignity that his honored guest was none other than the very confidential agent and adviser of a group of moneyed magnates whose influence extended to the uttermost parts of the earth.

The agent, like many other sensible Englishmen, was a bluff, hearty sort of man, with a keen eye for the practical side of life and an equally keen enjoyment of every other, and it was not five minutes before he had located in his round head the precise standing and qualifications of every man in the room.

While Yancey amused him greatly as a type quite new to him, the colonel filled him with delight. "So frank, so courteous, so hospitable, — quite the air of a country squire of the old school," he told Fitz afterward.

As a host that night, the colonel was in his happiest vein, and by the time the coffee was served, had succeeded not only in entertaining the table in his own inimitable way, but he had drawn out from each one of his guests, not excepting the reticent Fitz, some anecdote or incident of his life, bringing into stronger relief the finer qualities of him who told it.

Kerfoot in a ponderous way gave the details of a murder case, tried before him many years ago, in which the judge's charge so influenced the jury that the man was acquitted, and justly so, as was afterward proved. Yancey related an incident of the war, where he, only a drummer boy at the time, assisted, at great risk, in carrying a wounded comrade from the field. And Fitz was forced to admit that one of the largest financial operations of the day would have been a failure had he not stepped in at the critical moment and saved it.

Up to this point in the dinner not the slightest reference had been made to the railroad or its interests except by the impetuous Yancey, who asked Fitz what the bonds would probably be worth, and who was promptly silenced by the colonel with the suggestive remark that none were for sale, especially at this time.

When, however, by the direction of the colonel, the cloth was removed and the old mahogany table that Chad rubbed down every morning with a cork was left with only the glasses, a pair of coasters and their decanters, — the madeira within reach of the judge's hand, — the colonel rose from his chair and spread out on the polished surface a stained and ragged map, labelled in one corner in quaint letters, "Lands of John Carter, Esquire, of Carter Hall." Only then was the colonel ready for business.

"This is the correct survey, I believe, Jedge," said the colonel.

person for his spectacles, found them in the inside pocket of his nankeen waistcoat, and, perching them on the extreme end of his nose, looked over their rims and remarked that the original deeds of the colonel's estate had been based upon this map, and that, so far as he knew, it was correct. Then he added, —

“The partition line that was made immejitly aafter the war, dividin' the estate between Miss Ann Caarter and yo'self, Colonel, was also tuk from this survey.”

Fitz conferred with the agent for a moment and then asked the colonel where lay the deposit of coal of which he had spoken.

“In a moment, my dear Fitz,” said the colonel deprecatingly, and turning to the agent, —

“The city of Fairfax, suh, that we discussed this mornin', will be located to the right of this section; the Tench runs here; the iron bridge, suh, should cross at this point,” marking it with his thumb-nail. “Or perhaps you gentlemen will decide to have it nearer the Hall. It is immaterial to me.”

Then looking at Fitz, “I can't locate the coal, my dear Fitz; but I think it is up here on the hill at the foot of the range.”

The agent lost interest immediately in the iron bridge over the Tench, and asked a variety of questions about the deposit, all of which the colonel answered courteously and patiently, but evidently with a desire to change the subject as soon as possible.

The Englishman, however, was persistent, while the judge's last sententious remark regarding the recent subdivision of the estate awakened a new interest in Fitz.

What if this coal should not be on the colonel's land at all ! He caught his breath at the thought.

It was Fitz's only chance to restore the colonel's fortunes ; and although for obvious reasons he dared not tell him so, it was really the only interest the Englishman had in the scheme at all.

Indeed, the agent had frankly said so to Fitz, adding that he was anxious to locate a deposit of coal somewhere in the vicinity of the line of the colonel's proposed road ; because the extension of certain railroads in which the syndicate was interested — not the C. & W. A. L. R. R., however — depended almost entirely upon the purchase of this vital commodity.

Full of these instructions the agent, after listening to a panegyric upon the resources of Fairfax County, interrupted rather curtly a glowing statement of the colonel's concerning the enormous value of the Garden Spot securities by asking this question : —

“ Are the coal lands for sale ? ”

Fitz shivered at its directness, fearing that the colonel would catch the drift affairs were taking and become alarmed. His fears were groundless ; the shot had gone over his head.

“ No, suh ! My purpose is to use it to supply our shops and motive power.”

“ If you should decide to sell the lands I would make an investigation at once,” replied the agent quietly, but with meaning in his voice.

The colonel looked at him eagerly.

“ Would you at the same time consider the purchase of our securities ? ”

“ I might.”

“ When would you go ? ”

“ To-morrow night, or not at all. I return to England in a week.”

Yancey and the judge looked at each other inquiringly, with a certain anxious expression suggestive of some impending trouble. The judge recovered himself first, and quickly filled his glass, leaving but one more measure in the decanter. This measure Yancey immediately emptied into his own person, as perhaps the only place where it would be entirely safe from the treacherous thirst of the judge.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Fitz read in their faces these mental processes, and was more determined than ever to break up at once what he called "the settlement."

"Are you sho, Colonel," inquired Kerfoot, catching at straws, "that the coal lands lie entirely on yo' father's property? Does not the Barbour lan' jine yo's on the hill?"

"I am not positively sho, suh, but I have always understood that what we call the coal hills belonged to my father. You see," said the colonel, turning to the agent, "this grade of wild lan' is never considered of much value with us, and a few hundred acres mo' or less is never insisted on among old families of our standin' whose estates jine."

Yancey expanded his vest, and said authoritatively that he was quite sure the coal hills were on the Barbour property. He had shot partridges over that land many a time.

The agent, who had listened calmly to the discussion, remarked dryly that until the colonel definitely ascertained whether he had any lands to sell it would be a useless waste of time to make the trip.

"Quite so," said Kerfoot, raising the emptied decanter to his eye, and replacing it again with a look at Yancey expressive of the contempt in which he held a man who could commit so mean an act.

"But, Colonel," said Fitz, "can't you telegraph to-morrow and find out?"

"To whom, my dear Fitz? It would take a week to get the clerk of the co'te to look through the records. Nobody at Barbour's knows."

"Does Miss Nancy know?"

The colonel shook his head dubiously.

Fitz's face suddenly lighted up as he started from his seat, and caught the colonel by the arm.

"Does Chad?"

"Chad! Yes, Chad might."

Fitz nearly overturned his chair in his eagerness to reach the top of the kitchen stairs.

"Come up here, Chad, quick as your legs can carry you — two steps at a time!"

Chad hurried into the room with the face of a man sent for to put out a fire.

"Chad," said the colonel, "you know the big hill as you go up from the marsh at home?"

"Yes, sah."

"Whose lan' is the coal on, mine or Jedge Barbour's?"

The old darky's face changed from an expression of the deepest anxiety to an effort at the deepest thought. The change was so sudden that the wrinkles got tangled up in the attempt, resulting in an expression of vague uncertainty.

"You mean, Colonel, de hill whar we cotch de big coon?"

"Yes," said the colonel encouragingly, ignorant of the coon, but knowing that there was only one hill.

"Well, Jedge Barbour's niggers always said dat de coon was dere coon, 'ca'se he was treed on dere lan', and we 'sputed dat it was our coon, 'ca'se it was on our lan'."

"Who got the coon?" asked Fitz.

"Oh, we got de coon!" And Chad's eyes twinkled.

"That settles it. It's your land, Colonel," said Fitz, with one of his sudden roars, in which everybody joined but Chad and the judge.

"But den, gemmen," — Chad was a little uncomfortable at the merriment, — "it was our coon for sho. I knowed whar de line went, 'ca'se I he'p Marsa John caarry de spyglass when he sold de woodlan's to Jedge Barbour, an' de coon was on our side ob dat line."

If Chad's first statement caused nothing but laughter, the second produced nothing but the profoundest interest.

CHAD IN SEARCH OF A COAL-FIELD

The colonel turned the map to Chad's side of the table. Every man in the room stood up and craned his head forward.

"Now, Chad," said the colonel, "this map is a plan of our lan' — same as if you were lookin' down on it. Here is the road to Caartersville. See that square, black mark? That's Caarter Hall. This is the marsh, and that is the coal hill. Now, standin' here in the marsh, — this is where our line begins, Fitz, — standin' here, Chad, in the marsh, which side of the line is that hill on? Mine or Jedge Barbour's?"

The old man bent over the table, and scanned the plan closely.

"W'at 's dis blue wiggle lookin' like a big fish-wum?"

"That 's the Tench River."

Chad continued his search, — his wrinkled brown hand, with its extended forefinger capped by its stumpy nail, looking for all the world like a mud turtle with head out crawling over the crumpled surface of the map.

"Scuse me till I run down to de kitchen an' git my spec's. I can't see like" —

"Here, take mine!" said Fitz, handing him his gold ones. He would have lent him his eyes if he could have found that coal-field the sooner.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The turtle crawled slowly up, its head thrust out inquiringly, inched along the margin of the map, and backed carefully down again, pausing for such running commentaries as "Dis yer 's de ribber;" "Dat 's de road;" "Dis de ma'sh."

The group was now a compact mass, every eye watching Chad's finger as though it were a divining rod, — Fitz full of smothered fears lest after all the prize should slip from his grasp; the agent anxious but reserved; Yancey and the judge hovering between hope and despair, with eyes on the empty decanter; and last of all the colonel, on the outside, holding a candle himself, so that his guests might see the better — the least interested man in the room.

Presently the finger stopped, and Chad looked up into his master's face.

"If I was down dar, Marsa George, jes a minute, I could tole ye, 'ca'se I reckelmember de berry tree whar Marsa John had de spyglass sot on its legs. I held de pole on de rock way up yander on de hill, an' in dat berry rock Marsa John done cut a crotch."

"And which way is the crotch in the rock from the marsh here?" asked Fitz eagerly.

took off the gold-rimmed glasses, and handed them with great deference to Fitz.

“ ’Tain’t no use, Marsa George. I kin go frough dat ma’sh blindfolded in de night an’ cotch a ’possum airy time along airy one ob dem fences ; but dis yer foolin’ wid lan’s on paper is too much for Chad. ’Fo’ Gawd, I doan’ know ! ”

XI

CHAD ON HIS OWN CABIN FLOOR

THE night after the eventful dinner in Bedford Place, the colonel, accompanied by his guests, had alighted at a dreary way station, crawled into a lumbering country stage, and with Chad on the box as pilot, had stopped before a great house with ghostly trailing vines and tall chimneys outlined against the sky.

When I left my room on the following morning the sunlight was pouring through the big colonial window, and the breath of the delicious day — laden with the sweet smell of bending blossoms — floated in through the open blinds.

Descending the great spiral staircase with its slender mahogany balusters, — here and there a break, — I caught sight of the entrance hall below, with its hanging glass lantern, quaint haircloth sofas lining the white walls, and half-oval tables heaped with flowers, and so on through the wide-open door leading out upon a vine-covered porch. This had high pillars and low railings against which stood some broad settles — all white.

The colonel, Fitz, and the English agent were still in their rooms, — three pairs of polished shoes outside their several doors bearing silent witness to the fact, — and the only person stirring was a pleasant-faced negro woman with white apron and gay-colored bandana, who was polishing the parlor floor with a long brush, her little pickaninny astraddle on the broom end for weight.

I pushed aside the hanging vines, sat down on one of the wooden benches, and looked about me. This, then, was Carter Hall !

The house itself bore evidence of having once been a stately home. It was of plaster stucco, yellow washed, peeled and broken in places, with large dormer windows and sloping roof, one end of which was smothered in a tangle of Virginia creeper and trumpet vine climbing to the very chimney-top.

In front there stretched away what had once been a well-kept lawn, now a wild of coarse grass broken only by the curving line of the driveway and bordered by a row of Lombardy poplars, with here and there a gap, — bitten out by hungry camp-fires.

To the right rose a line of hills increasing in height as they melted into the morning haze, and to the left lay an old-fashioned garden, — one great sweep of bloom. With the wind over it, and blowing your way, you were steeped in roses.

I began unconsciously to recall to myself all the traditions of this once famous house.

Yes, there must be the window where Nancy waved good-by to her lover, and there were the flower-beds into which he had fallen headlong from his horse, — only a desolate corner now, with the grass and tall weeds grown quite up to the scaling wall, and the wooden shutters tightly closed. I wondered whether they had ever been opened since.

And there under my eyes stood the very step where Chad had helped his old master from his horse the day his sweetheart Henny had been purchased from Judge Barbour, and close to the garden gate were the negro quarters where they had begun their housekeeping. I thought I knew the very cabin.

And that line of silver glistening in the morning light must be the River Tench, and the bend near the willows the spot where the colonel would build the iron bridge with the double span, and across and beyond on the plateau, backed by the hills, the site of the future city of Fairfax.

I left my seat, strolled out into the garden, crossed the grass jewelled with dew, and filled my lungs with the odor of the sweet box bordering the beds, — a rare delight in these days of modern gardens. Suddenly I came upon a wide straw hat and a broad back bending among the bushes. It was Chad.

“Mawnin’, Major ; fust fox out de hole, is yer ? Lawd a massey, ain’t I glad ter git back to my ole mist’ess ! Lan’ sakes alive ! I ain’t slep’ none all night a-thinkin’ ober it. You ain’t seen my Henny ? Dat was her sister’s chile rubbin’ down de flo’. She come ober dis mawnin’ ter help, so many folks here. Wait till I git a basket ob dese yer ole pink rose-water roses. See how I snip ’em short ? Know what I’m gwine to do wid ’em ? Sprinkle ’em all ober de tablecloth. I lay dey ain’t nobody done dat for my mist’ess since I been gone. But, Major,” — here Chad laid down the basket on the garden walk and looked at me with a serious air, — “I done got dat coal lan’ business down to a fine p’int. I was up dis mawnin’ ’fo’ daylight, an’ I foun’ dat rock, an’ de crotch is dar yit ; I scrape de moss offen it myself ; an’ I foun’ de tree too.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

I ain't sayin' nuffin, but jes you wait till after breakfas', an' dey all go out lookin' for de coal ! Jes you wait, dat's all ! Chad's on his own cabin flo' now. Can't fool dis chile no mo'."

This was good news as far as it went. Our sudden exodus from Bedford Place had been determined upon immediately after Chad's dismal failure to locate the coal-field, Fitz having carried the day against Yancey, Kerfoot, and even the agent himself, who was beginning to waver under the accumulation of uncertainties.

"Dat's enough roses to bury up de dishes. Rub yo' nose down in 'em. Ain't dey sweet ! Now, come along wid me, Major. I done tole Henny 'bout you an' de tar'pins an' de times de gemmen had. Dis way, Major ; won't take a minute, an' ef ye all go back to-night, — an' I yerd Mister Englishman say he got to go, — you might n't hab anudder chance. Henny's cookin', ye know. Dis way. Step under dat honeysuckle !"

I looked through an open door and into a dingy, smoke-dried interior, ceiled with heavy rafters, and hung with herbs, red peppers, onions, and the like. This was lighted by three small windows, and furnished with a row of dressers filled with crockery and kitchen ware, and permeated by that savory smell which presages a generous breakfast. On one side of the fireplace rested the great hominy mortar, cut from a tree trunk, found in all Virginia kitchens, and on the other the universal brick oven with its iron doors, — the very doors, I thought, that had closed over Chad's goose when Henny was a girl. Between the mortar and the oven opened, or rather caverned, a fireplace as wide as the colonel's hospitality, and high and deep enough to turn a coach in. It really covered one end of the room.

Bending over the swinging crane hung with pots and fringed with hooks, — baited so often with good dinners, — stood an old woman with bent back, her gray head bound up with a yellow handkerchief.

"Henny, de Major made a special p'int o' comin' to see ye 'fo' he gits his breakfas'."

She looked up and dropped me a curtsy.

"Mawin', marsa. I ain't much ter see, I'm so ole an' mizzble wid dese yer cricks in my back an' sich a passel o' white folks. How did my Chad git along up dar 'mong de Yankees?"

I gave Chad so good a character that every tooth in his head came out on dress parade, and was about to draw from Henny some of her own experiences, — this loyal old servant whose life from her girlhood to her old age had been one of the romantic traditions of the roof that sheltered her, — when Chad, who had gone out with the roses, returned with the news that the colonel and his guests were breathing the morning air on the front porch, and were much disturbed over my prolonged absence.

The colonel caught sight of me as I rounded the corner, Fitz and the agent joining in his outburst of hilarious welcome, intoxicated as they all were with the elixir of that most exhilarating of all hours, the hour before breakfast of a summer morning in the country.

“Welcome, my dear Major,” called the colonel, “a hearty welcome to Caarter Hall! Come up here where you can get a view of Fairfax, suh!” And by the time I had mounted the steps he was leaning over the railing, with Fitz on the one side and the agent on the other, sweeping the horizon with his index finger, and drawing imaginary curves and building bridges and locating railroad stations in the air with as much confidence and hope as if he really saw the gangs of laborers at work across the fields, their shovels glinting in the dazzling sunlight.

“Jes cast yo’ eyes, suh,” — this to the agent, — “and tell me, suh, if you have ever in yo’ world-wide experience seen such a location for a great city. Level as a flo’, watered by the

CHAD ON HIS OWN CABIN FLOOR

Tench, and sheltered by a line of hills that are beauty itself — it is made for it, suh ! ”

The agent did full justice to the natural advantages and then asked, —

“ Is the coal in that range ? ”

“ No, suh ; the coal is behind us on an out-lyin’ spur. I will take you there after breakfast.”

And then followed a brief description of the changes the war had made in the homestead, the burning of the barns, the abandonment of the quarters, the destruction of the lawns (“ A yard for their damnable wagons, suh ”), the colonel pointing out with great delight the very dent in the ridge where General Early had ridden through and captured the whole detachment without the loss of a man.

While we were talking, that same rustling of silk that I had learned to know so well in Bedford Place was heard in the hall, then a sweet, cheery voice giving some directions to Chad, and the next instant dear Aunt Nancy — Fitz and I had long since dared to call her so — floated (she never seemed to walk) out upon the porch with a word and a curtsy to the agent, a hand each to Fitz and me, and a kiss for the colonel.

Then came the breakfast, and such a breakfast ! The outpourings of a Virginia kitchen, with the table showered with roses, and the great urn shining and smoking, and the relays of waffles and corn bread and broiled chicken ; all in the old-fashioned dining-room, with its high wainscoting, spindle-legged sideboards, and deep window seats, the long, moon-faced clock in the corner — and the rest of it ! After that the quiet smoke under the vine-covered end of the portico with the view towards Cartersville.

“ There comes the jedge,” said the colonel, pointing to a cloud of dust following a two-wheel gig, “ and Major Yancey behind on horseback.” (They had both been dropped outside their respective garden gates the night before.) “ Now, gentlemen, as soon as my attorney arrives with the surveys and deeds, we will adjourn to my library and locate this coal-field.”

Yancey's horse proved, on closer inspection, to be the remnant of an army mule with a moth-eaten mane and a polished tail bare of hair, — worn off, no doubt, in a lifelong struggle with the Fairfax County fly. The major was without the luxury of a saddle, some one having borrowed the only one the owner of the mule possessed, and his breeches, in consequence, were halfway up his knees. The judge arrived in better shape, the gig being his own and fairly comfortable, — the same he rode to circuit, a yellow-painted vehicle washed only when it rained, — and the horse the property of the village livery man, who had a yearly contract with his Honor for its use.

Chad was waiting on the flagstones, surrounded by some stray pickaninnies, when the procession stopped, and assisted the major to alight, with as much form and ceremony as if he had been the best mounted gentleman in the land. The saddleless fragment was then led to a supporting fence. The judicial equipage was accorded the luxury of a shed, where the annual contract was served with a full measure of oats, — Chad's recognition of his more exalted station.

The judge bowed gracefully and with great dignity, and with the air of a chief-justice entering the court room; then preceding the colonel and his guests, — without a word having fallen from his lips, — he entered a small room opening into the parlor. There he placed upon a chair certain mysterious-looking packages, long and otherwise, one a tin case, which he uncapped, spreading its contents upon a table.

It proved to be another and larger map than the one Chad had pored over, and showed distinctly the boundary lines between two dots marked "Oak" and "Rock" dividing the Carter and Barbour estates.

Up to this time Fitz and the agent had preserved the outward appearance of two idle gentlemen visiting a friend in the country, with no interest beyond the fresh air and the environments of a charming hospitality. With the unrolling of this map, however, and the discovery of the very boundary points insisted on by Chad in Bedford Place, their excitement could hardly be suppressed. The agent broke loose first.

"Before we find out, Colonel Carter, to whom this coal belongs, which may take some valuable time, I want to examine the quality of the vein itself. I would like to go now."

"By all means, suh; and my people shall go with us," said the colonel, turning to Kerfoot with instructions to bring Chad and all the maps later. — Yancey excused himself on the ground of the heat. Then donning a wide straw hat and picking up a cane, — something he never used in New York, — the colonel led the way through the rear door, across a stone wall, and up a hill covered with a second growth of timber.

The experienced eye of the Englishman took in the lay of the land at a glance, and beckoning Fitz to one side he stooped and picked something from the ground which he examined carefully with a magnifying glass. Then they both disappeared hurriedly over the hill.

When they returned, half an hour later, the perspiration was rolling from the agent, and Fitz's eyes were blazing. Both were loaded down with bundles of broken bits of rock, tied up in their several handkerchiefs, large enough to start a geological collection in a country museum.

"What is it, Fitz — diamonds?" I said, laughing.

"Yes; black ones at that." He was almost breathless. "Solid bed of bituminous! Clear down to China! Don't breathe a word yet, for your life!"

The agent was calmer. The coal-bed, he said, seemed to be of more than ordinary richness, and as far as he could judge lay in a vein of generous width. He was ready for the survey, and would like the boundary points located at once.

The next instant Chad's head peered through the tangled underbrush. He carried the roll of maps, the judge, who followed, contenting himself with a package tied with red tape.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The old darky's face was one broad grin from ear to ear.

The judge unrolled a map and placed it on a flat rock with a stone at each corner. Then he untied the package, selected an ink-stained and faded document marked "Deed — John Carter to E. A. Barbour," and ran his eye along the quaint page, reading as he went : —

"Starting from an oak, blazed diamond C, , along a line S. E. to a rock marked C cross B, C + B, in all a distance of 1437 linear feet.'

"Now, Chad, we will fust find the tree," said the judge, looking around for his map-bearer. "Where 's that nigger ? Chad ! "

The old man had disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him up. The next minute we heard a faint halloo below us, near the edge of a small swamp. A man was waving his hat and shouting, —

"Eve'ybody come yer ! "

Fitz started on a run, and the agent and I followed on the double-quick. At the end of a crooked stone wall, half surrounded by water, was a great spreading oak, its branches reaching halfway across the narrow marsh. Within touching distance on the yielding ground stood Chad, pointing to a smooth blaze, stained and overgrown with lichen.

CHAD ON HIS OWN CABIN FLOOR

It bore this mark,  !

"It tallies to a dot. Now, Chad, the rock ! the rock !" said Fitz, hardly able to contain himself.

The darky pointed straight up the hill, the sky-line of which could be seen entire from where we stood, and indicated an isolated rock jutting out above the tree-tops.

I thought Fitz would have hugged him.

"How do you know it is the rock with the crotch in it ? Speak, you grinning lunatic !"

"I was dar dis mawnin' by daylight."

"What's it marked ?" shouted Fitz, catching him by both shoulders. "What's it marked ? Quick, before I shake the breath out of you !"

"Wid a C an' a cross an' a B — so." And the old man traced it with his finger in the mud.

"Every pound of coal on the colonel's land !" cried Fitz, with a yell that brought his host and Kerfoot as fast as their legs could carry them.

"Stop !" protested Kerfoot gravely. "This only settles the Caarter and Barbour division. There was another division here a year ago between Miss Ann Caarter and the colonel. With that I am mo' familiar, for I drew the deeds, which are here," holding up a bundle ; "and

I was also present with the surveyor. You are wrong, Mr. Fitzpatrick ; this entire hill outside the Barbour division is Miss Ann Caarter's, and the coal is on her land. The colonel's portion is back there along the Trench."

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CHECK

AN hour later I found Fitz flat on the grass under one of the apple-trees behind the house, completely broken up by the discoveries of the morning.

After all his work, here was the colonel worse off than ever. Nobody could tell what a woman would do. Aunt Nancy was better than the average (Fitz was a bachelor), but then she had peculiar old family notions about selling land, and ten chances to one she would not sell a foot of it, and there right in the house sat a man with his pocket full of blank checks, any one of which was good for a million of pounds sterling. Even if she did sell it, she would pension the dear old fellow off on a stipend instead of an establishment. He wanted somebody to dig a hole and cover Fitzpatrick up. Anybody could see that the railroad scheme was deadlier than a last year's pass, the farm hopeless, and the house fast becoming a ruin. It was enough to make a man jump off a dock.

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

Fitz's tirade was interrupted by Chad, who appeared with a message. The colonel wanted everybody in the library.

When we entered, the judge occupied the head of the table, surrounded by law papers, all of which were opened. The agent was bending over him, reading attentively, and entering extracts in his note-book. Every one became seated.

"Mr. Fitzpatrick," said the agent, "I have spent an hour with Judge Kerfoot going over the title of this property; and I am prepared to make a proposition for its purchase. I have reduced it to writing," — picking up a half-sheet of foolscap from the table, — "and I submit it to the owners through you."

Fitz read it without changing a muscle, and handed it to the colonel. Yancey and the judge craned forward to catch the first syllables.

The colonel read it to the end, getting paler and paler as its meaning became clear, and then, with a certain pathos in his voice that was childlike, it was so genuine, said, —

"If this is accepted, I presume, suh, you will not look any further into my road?"

"You are right. My instructions cover only the purchase of this deposit. I have room for only one operation."

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CHECK

The colonel rose from his chair, steadied himself on the low window-sill, and looked out across the Trench. The silence was oppressive — only the ticking of the clock in the next room and the bees among the flowers outside.

“Wait until I return,” he said, crumbling the paper.

In a moment he was back, leading in his aunt by the hand. Miss Nancy entered with a half-puzzled look on her face, which deepened into certain anxiety as she began to realize the pronounced formality of the proceedings. The colonel cleared his throat impressively.

“Nancy, an investigation begun in New York by my dear friend Fitz, and completed here to-day, results in the discov’ry that what you have always considered as slight outcrop-pin’s of coal, and wuthless, is really of vely great value.” The colonel here unbuttoned his coat, and threw out his chest. “A syndicate of English capitalists have, through our guest, offered you the sum of one hundred thousand dollars for the coal-hill, with a royalty of ten cents per ton for every ton mined over a certain amount, one thousand dollars to be paid now and the balance on the search of title and signin’ of the contract. I believe I have stated it correctly, suh ? ”

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

The agent bowed his head, and scrutinized Miss Nancy's face with the eye of a hawk.

The dear lady sank into a chair. For a moment she lost her breath. Yancey handed her a fan with a quickness of movement never seen in him before, and the colonel continued, —

“ This will of course still leave you, Nancy, this house and about half of the farm property transferred to you by me at the fo'closure sale.”

The little woman looked from one to the other in a dazed sort of way, and her eye rested on Fitz.

“ What shall I do, Mr. Fitzpatrick ? It seems to me a grave step to sell any part of the estate.”

Fitz blushed at the mark of her confidence, and said that with the royalty clause he thought the proposition a favorable one.

“ And you, George ? ” turning to the colonel.

The colonel bowed his head. He must advise its acceptance.

“ When do you want an answer, sir ? ”

“ To-day, madam,” said the Englishman, who had not taken his eyes from her face.

“ You shall have it in half an hour,” she said gently, then rose hastily, and left the room.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CHECK

I looked at the colonel. Whatever great wave of disappointment had swept over him when his own idol was broken, there was no trace of it in his face. Even the change this sudden influx of wealth into the family might make in his own condition never seemed to have crossed his mind. He did not follow her. He simply waited. Between his own plans and his aunt's good fortune there was but one course for him.

The room took on the whispered silence of a court awaiting an overdue jury. Fitz was still incredulous and still anxious, saying to me in an undertone that he felt sure she would either refuse it altogether or couple it with some conditions that the agent could not accept; either would be fatal. Yancey and the judge, who had been partly paralyzed at the rapidity of the transaction, conferred in a corner, while the agent proceeded to make a copy of the proposition with as much composure as if he bought a coal-mine every day. The colonel sat by himself, his chair tilted back, his eyes half closed.

In the midst of this uncertainty Chad entered with a message. "Miss Nancy wants de colonel." In five minutes more he entered with another. Miss Nancy wanted Fitz and me.

We followed the old servant up the winding staircase and down the long hall, past the old-fashioned wardrobe and the great chintz-covered lounge, waited until Chad knocked gently, and entered the dear lady's bedroom.

She sat near the window by the side of the high-post bedstead, rocking gently to and fro. The colonel was standing with his back to the light, coat open, thumbs in his armholes, face beaming.

"I sent for you," she began, "because I want you both to hear my answer before I inform the agent. The land only was mine, and but for your love and devotion to the colonel would still be a wild hill. The coal, therefore, belongs to him. Go and tell the Englishman I accept his offer. The land and all the coal I give to George."

When, an hour later, the transaction was complete, the receipts and preliminary contracts signed, and the small, modest-looking check — the first instalment — had been transferred from the plethoric check-book of the agent to the narrow, poverty-stricken pocket of the colonel, and the fact began to dawn simultaneously upon everybody that at last the dear old colonel was independent, an enthusiasm took possession of the room that soon became uncontrollable.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CHECK

Fitz caught him in his arms, and began hugging him in a way that endangered every rib in his body, calling out all the time that he had never felt so good in all the days of his life. Yancey and Kerfoot, who had stood one side, appalled by the magnitude of the sum paid, and who during the signing of the papers had looked at the colonel with the same sort of silent awe with which they would have regarded any other potentate rolling in estates, mines, and millions, broke through the enforced reserve, and exclaimed, with an outburst, that the South was looking up, and that a true Southern gentleman had come into his own, the judge adding with emphasis that the colonel had never looked so much like his noble father as when he stooped over and signed that receipt. Even the Englishman, hard, practical fellow that he was, congratulated him on his good fortune in a few short words that jumped out hot from his heart.

With this atmosphere about him it is not to be wondered at that the colonel lost the true inwardness of the situation. The fact that his aunt's boundary line included every acre of valuable land on the plantation, while his own poor portion only bordered the Tench, was to him simply one of those trifling errors which sometimes occur in the partition of vast landed estates. And although when the gift was made he felt more than ever her loving-kindness, he could not now, on more mature reflection and after hearing the encomiums of his friends, really see how she could have pursued any other course.

And yet, with the sale accomplished and he rich beyond his wildest dreams, he was precisely the same man in bearing, manner, and speech that he had been in his impecunious days in Bedford Place. He was rich then — in hopes, in plans, in the reality of his dreamland. He was no richer now. The check in his pocket made no difference.

The only perceptible change was when he recounted to me his plans for the restoration of the homestead and the comfort of its inmates. "I shall rebuild the barns and cabins, and lay out a new lawn. The po'ch" — looking up — "needs some repairs, and the ca'iage-house must be enlarged. The coaching days are not over yet, Major ; Nancy must have" —

Chad, entering with a luncheon for the exhausted circle, diverted the colonel's train of thought, cutting short his summary. For a moment he watched his old servant musingly, then following him into the next room he called him to one side, and with marked tenderness in his manner unfolded the Englishman's check.

The old servant put down the empty tray, adjusted his spectacles, and examined it carefully.

"What 's dis, Marsa George ? "

"A thousand dollars, Chad."

"Golly ! Monst'ous quare kind o' money ! Jes a scrap. Ain't big enough to wad a gun, is she ? An' Misser Englishman gib ye dis for dat ole brier patch ? "

Chad was trembling all over, full to the very eyelids.

The colonel held out his hand. The old servant bent his head, his master's hand fast in his. Then their eyes met.

"Yes, Chad, for you and me. There 's no hard work for you any mo', old man. Go and tell Henny."

That night at dinner, Fitz on the colonel's right, the Englishman next to Aunt Nancy, Kerfoot, Yancey, and I disposed in regular order, Chad noiseless and attentive, the colonel arose in his chair, radiant to the very tip ends of his cravat, and, in a voice which trembled as it rose, said, —

COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE

“Gentlemen, the events of the day have unexpectedly brought me an influx of wealth far beyond my brightest anticipations. This is due in great measure to the untirin’ brain and vast commercial resources of my dear friend Mr. Fitzpatrick, who has labored with me durin’ my sojourn Nawth in the development of these properties, and who now, with that unselfishness which caaracterizes his life, refuses to accept any share in the result.

“They have also strengthened the tie existin’ between myself and my old friend the Major on my left, who oftentimes when the day was darkest has cheered me by his counsel and companionship.

“But, gentlemen, they have done mo’.” The colonel’s feet now barely touched the floor. “They have enabled me to provide for one of the loveliest of her sex, — she who graces our boa’d, — and to enrich her declinin’ days not only with all the comforts, but with many of the luxuries she was bawn to enjoy.

“Fill yo’ glasses, gentlemen, and drink to the health of that greatest of all blessings, — a true Southern lady !”

OTHER TALES

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

I WAS bending over my easel, hard at work upon a full-length portrait of a young girl in a costume of fifty years ago, when the door of my studio opened softly and Aunt Chloe came in.

“Good-mawnin’, suh ! I did n’ think you ’d come to-day, bein’ a Sunday,” she said, with a slight bend of her knees. “I ’ll jes’ sweep up a li’l mite ; doan’ ye move, I won’t ’sturb ye.”

Aunt Chloe had first opened my door a year before with a note from Marny, a brother brush, which began with “Here is an old Southern mammy who has seen better days ; paint her if you can,” and ended with, “Anyway, give her a job.”

The bearer of the note was indeed the ideal mammy, even to the bandana handkerchief bound about her head, and the capacious waist and ample bosom — the lullaby resting-place for many a child, white and black. I had never seen a real one in the flesh before. I had heard about them in my earlier days. Daddy Billy, my father’s body-servant and my father’s slave, who lived to be ninety-four, had told me of his own Aunt Mirey, who had died in the old days, but too far back for me to remember. And I had listened, when a boy, to the traditions connected with the plantations of my ancestors, — of the Keziahs and Mammy Crouches and Mammy Janes, — but I had never looked into the eyes of one of the old school until I saw Aunt Chloe, nor had I ever fully realized how quaintly courteous and gentle one of them could be until, with an old-time manner, born of a training seldom found outside of the old Southern homes, she bent forward, spread her apron with both hands, and with a little backward dip had said as she left me that first day, “Thank ye, suh! I’ll come eve’y Sunday mawnin’. I’ll do my best to please ye, an’ I specs I kin.”

I do not often work on Sunday, but my picture had been too long delayed, waiting for a faded wedding dress worn by the original when she was a bride, and which had only been found when two of her descendants had ransacked their respective garrets.

“Mus’ be mighty driv, suh,” she said, “a-workin’ on de Sabbath day. Golly, but dat’s a purty lady!” and she put down her pail. “I see it las’ Sunday when I come in, but she did n’t hab dem ruffles ’round her neck den dat you done gib her. 'Clar' to goodness, dat chile look like she was jes' a-gwine to speak."

Aunt Chloe was leaning on her broom, her eyes scrutinizing the portrait.

"Well, if dat doan' beat de lan'! I ain't never seen none o' dem frocks since de ole times. An' dem li'l low shoes wid de ribbons crossed on de ankles! She 's de livin' pussone-cation — she is so, for a fac'. Uhm! Uhm!" (It is difficult to convey this peculiar sound of complete approval in so many letters.)

"Did you ever know anybody like her?" I asked.

The old woman straightened her back, and for a moment her eyes looked into mine. I had often tried to draw from her something of her earlier life, but she had always evaded my questions. Marny had told me that his attempts had at first been equally disappointing.

"Body as ole 's me, suh, seen a plenty o' people." Then her eyes sought the canvas again.

After a moment's pause she said, as if to herself, "You 's de real quality, chile, dat you is; eve'y spec an' spinch o' ye."

I tried again.

"Does it look like anybody you ever saw, Aunt Chloe?"

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

"It do an' it don't," she answered critically.
"De feet is like hern, but de eyes ain't."

"Who?"

"Oh, Miss Nannie." And she leaned again on her broom and looked down on the floor.

I heaped up a little pile of pigments on one corner of my palette and flattened them for a high light on a fold in the satin gown.

"Who was Miss Nannie?" I asked carelessly. I was afraid the thread would break if I pulled too hard.

"One o' my chillen, honey." A peculiar softness came into her voice.

"Tell me about her. It will help me get her eyes right, so you can remember her better. They don't look human enough to me, anyhow" (this last to myself). "Where did she live?"

"Where dey all live — down in de big house. She warn't Marse Henry's real chile, but she come o' de blood. She did n't hab dem kind o' shoes on her footses when I fust see her, but she wore 'em when she lef' me. Dat she did." Her voice rose suddenly and her eyes brightened. "An' dem ain't nothin' to de way dey shined. I ain't never seen no satin slippers shine like dem slippers; dey was jes' ablaze!"

I worked on in silence. Marny had cautioned me not to be too curious. Some day she might open her heart and tell me wonderful stories of her earlier life, but I must not appear too anxious. She had become rather suspicious of strangers since she had moved North and lost track of her own people, Marny had said.

Aunt Chloe picked up her pail and began moving some easels into a far corner of my studio and piling the chairs in a heap. This done, she stopped again and stood behind me, looking intently at the canvas over my shoulder.

“My! My! ain’t dat de ve’y image of dat frock? I kin see it now jes’ as Miss Nannie come down de stairs. But you got to put dat gold chain on it ’fore it gits to be de ve’y ’spress image. I had it roun’ my own neck once; I know jes’ how it looked.”

I laid down my palette, and picking up a piece of chalk asked her to describe it so that I could make an outline.

“It was long an’ heavy, an’ it woun’ roun’ de neck twice an’ hung down to de wais’. An’ dat watch on de end of it! Well, I ain’t seen none like dat one sence. I ’clar’ to ye it was jes’ ’s teeny as one o’ dem li’l biscuits I used to make for ’er when she come in de kitchen — an’ she was dere most of de time. Dey did n’t care nuffin for her much. Let ’ergo roun’ barefoot half de time, an' her hair a-flyin'. Only one good frock to her name, an' dat warn't nuf-fin but calico. I used to wash dat many a time for her long 'fore she was outen her bed. Allus makes my blood bile to dis day whenever I think of de way dey treated dat chile. But it did n't make no diff'ence what she had on — shoes or no shoes — her footses was dat li'l. An' purty ! Wid her big eyes an' her cheeks jes' 's fresh as dem rosewater roses dat I used to snip off for ole Sam to put on de table. Oh ! I tell ye, if ye could picter her like dat dey would n't be nobody clear from here to glory could come nigh her."

Aunt Chloe's eyes were kindling with every word. I remembered Marny's warning and kept still. I had abandoned the sketch of the chain as an unnecessary incentive, and had begun again with my palette knife, pottering away, nodding appreciatingly, and now and then putting a question to clear up some tangled situation as to dates and localities which her rambling talk had left unsettled.

"Yes, suh, down in de blue grass country, near Lexin'ton, Kentucky, whar my ole master, Marse Henry Gordon, lived," she answered to my inquiry as to where this all happened. "I used to go eve'y year to see him after de war was over, an' kep' it up till he died. Dere warn't nobody like him den, an' dere ain't none now. He warn't never spiteful to chillen, white or black. Eve'ybody knowed dat. I was a pickaninny myse'f, an' I b'longed to him. An' he ain't never laid a lick on me, an' he wouldn't let nobody else do 't nuther, 'cept my mammy. I 'members one time when Aunt Dinah made cake dat ole Sam — he war a heap younger den — could n't put it on de table 'ca'se dere was a piece broke outen it. Sam he riz, an' Dinah she riz, an' after dey 'd called each other all de names dey could lay dere tongues to, Miss Ann, my own fust mist'ess, come in an' she say dem chillen tuk dat cake, an' 't ain't nary one o' ye dat 's 'sponsible. 'What 's dis,' says Marse Henry, — 'chillen stealin' cake? Send 'em here to me!' When we all come in — dere was six or eight of us — he says, 'Eve'y one o' ye look me in de eye; now which one tuk it?' I kep' lookin' away, fust on de flo' an' den out de windy. 'Look at me,' he says agin. 'You ain't lookin', Clo-rindy.' Den I cotched him watchin' me. 'Now you all go out,' he says, 'and de one dat's guilty kin come back agin.' Den we all went out in de yard. 'You tell him,' says one. 'No, you tell him;' an' dat 's de way it went on.

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

I knowed I was de wustest, for I opened de door o' de sideboard an' gin it to de others. Den I thought, if I don't tell him mebbe he 'll lick de whole passel on us, an' dat ain't right ; but if I go tell him an' beg his 'umble pardon he might lemme go. So I crep' 'round where he was a-settin' wid his book on his knee," — Aunt Chloe was now moving stealthily behind me, her eyes fixed on her imaginary master, head down, one finger in her mouth, — "an' I say, 'Marse Henry !' An' he look up an' say, 'Who 's dat ?' An' I say, 'Dat 's Clorindy.' An' he say, 'What you want ?' 'Marse Henry, I come to tell ye I was hungry, an' I see de door open an' I shove it back an' tuk de piece o' cake, an' maybe I thought if I done tole ye you 'd forgib me.'

" 'Den you is de ringleader,' he says, 'an' you tempted de other chillen ?' 'Yes,' I says, 'I spec so.' 'Well,' he says, lookin' down on de carpet, 'now dat you has perfessed an' beg pardon, you is good an' ready to pay 'tention to what I 'm gwine to say.' De other chillen had sneaked up an' was listenin' ; dey 'spected to see me git it, though dere ain't nary one of 'em ever knowed him to strike 'em a lick. Den he says, 'Dis here is a li'l thing, — dis stealin' a cake ; an' it 's a big thing at de same time. Miss Ann has been right smart put out 'bout it, an' I'm gwine to see dat it don't happen agin. If you see a pin on de fl'or you would n't steal it, — you 'd pick it up if you wanted it, an' it would n't be nuffin, 'cause somebody th'owed it away an' it was free to eve'body ; but if you see a piece o' money on de fl'or, you knowed nobody did n't th'ow dat away, an' if you pick it up an' don't tell, dat 's somethin' else — dat 's stealin', 'cause you tuk somethin' dat somebody else has paid somethin' for an' dat belongs to him. Now dis cake ain't o' much 'count, but it warn't yourn, an' you ought n't to ha' tuk it. If you 'd asked yo'r mist'ess for it she 'd gin you a piece. There ain't nuffin here you chillen doan' git when ye ask for it.' I did n't say nuffin more. I jes' waited for him to do anythin' he wanted to me. Den he looks at de carpet for a long time an' he says, —

“ ‘I reckon you won't take no mo' cake 'thout askin' for it, Clorindy, an' you chillen kin go out an' play agin.’ ”

The tears were now standing in her eyes.

“ Dat 's what my ole master was, suh ; I ain't never forgot it. If he had beat me to death he could n't 'a' done no mo' for me. He jes' splained to me, an' I ain't never forgot since.”

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

“Did your own mother find it out?” I asked.

The tears were gone now; her face was radiant again at my question.

“Dat she did, suh. One o’ de chillen done tole on me. Mammy jes’ made one grab as I run pas’ de kitchen door, an’ reached for a barrel stave, an’ she fairly sot — me — afire!”

Aunt Chloe was now holding her sides with laughter, fresh tears streaming down her cheeks.

“But Marse Henry never knowed it. Lawd, suh, dere ain’t nobody round here like him, nor never was. I kin ’member him now same as it was yisterday, wid his white hair, an’ he a-settin’ in his big chair. It was de las’ time I ever see him. De big house was gone, an’ de colored people was gone, an’ he was dat po’ he did n’t know where de nex’ mouf’ful was a-comin’ from. I come out behind him so,” — Aunt Chloe made me her old master and my stool his rocking-chair, — “an’ I pat him on the shoulder dis way, an’ he say, ‘Chloe, is dat you? How is it yo’ looks so comf’ble like?’ An’ I say, ‘It’s you, Marse Henry; you done it all; yo’ teachin’ made me what I is, an’ if you study about it you’ll know it’s so. An’ de others ain’t no wus’. Of all de colored people you owned, dere ain't nary one been hung, or been in de penitentiary, nor ain't knowed as liars. Dat 's de way you fotch us up.'

"An' I love him yet, an' if he was a-livin' to-day I'd work for him an' take care of him if I went hungry myse'f. De only fool thing Marster Henry ever done was a-marryin' dat widow woman for his second wife. Miss Nannie, dat looks a li'l bit like dat chile you got dere before ye" — and she pointed to the canvas — "wouldn't 'a' been sot on an' 'bused like she was but for her. Dat woman warn't nuffin but a harf-strainer noway, if I do say it. Eve'body knowed dat. How Marse Henry Gordon come to marry her nobody don't know till dis day. She warn't none o' our people. Dey do say dat he met her up to Frankfort when he was in de Legislater, but I don't know if dat 's so. But she warn't nuffin, nohow."

"Was Miss Nannie her child?" I asked, stepping back from my easel to get the better effect of my canvas.

"No, suh, dat she warn't!" with emphasis. "She was Marse Henry's own sister's chile, she was. Her people — Miss Nannie's — lived up in Indiany, an' dey was jes 's po' as watermelon rinds, and when her mother died Marse Henry sent for her to come live wid him, 'cause he said Miss Rachel — dat was dat woman's own chile by her fust husband — was lonesome. Dey was bofe about de one age, — fo'teen or fifteen years old, — but Lawd-a-massy ! Miss Rachel warn't lonesome 'cept for what she could n't git, an' she most broke her heart 'bout dat, much 's she could break it 'bout anything.

“ I remember de ve'y day Miss Nannie come. I see her comin' down de road totin' a big ban'-box, an' a carpet bag mos 's big 's herse'f. Den she turned in de gate. ‘ 'Fo' God,’ I says to ole Sam, who was settin' de table for dinner, ‘who 's dis yere comin' in ? ’ Den I see her stop an' set de bundles down an' catch her bref, and den she come on agin.

“ ‘Dat 's Marse Henry's niece,’ he says. ‘I heared de mist'ess say she was a-comin' one day dis week by de coach.’

“ I see right away dat dat woman was up to one of her tricks ; she did n't 'tend to let dat chile come no other way 'cept like a servant ; she was dat dirt mean.

“ Oh, you need n't look, suh ! I ain't meanin' no onrespect, but I knowed dat woman when Marse Henry fust married her, an' she ain't never fooled me once. Fust time she come into de house she walked plumb in de kitchen, where me an' ole Sam an' ole Dinah was a-eaten our dinner, we setten at de table like we useter did, and she flung her head up in de air and she says : ‘ After dis when I come in I want you niggers to git up on yo’ feet.’ Think o’ dat, will ye ? Marse Henry never called nary one of us nigger since we was pickaninnies. I knowed den she warn’t ’customed to nuthin’. But I tell ye she never put on dem kind o’ airs when Marse Henry was about. No, suh. She was always mighty sugar-like to him when he was home, but dere ain’t no conniption she warn’t up to when he could n’t hear of it. She had purty nigh riz de roof when he done tell her dat Miss Nannie was a-comin’ to live wid ’em, but she could n’t stand agin him, for warn’t her only daughter, Miss Rachel, livin’ on him, an’ not only Miss Rachel, but lots mo’ of her people where she come from ?

“ Well, suh, as soon as ole Sam said what chile it was dat was a-comin’ down de road I dropped my dishcloth an’ I run out to meet ’er.

“ ‘ Is you Miss Nannie ? ’ I says. ‘ Gimme dat bag,’ I says, ‘ an’ dat box.’

“ ‘ Yes,’ she says, ‘ dat ’s me, ’an’ ain’t you Aunt Chloe what I heared so much about ? ’

“ Honey, you ain’t never gwine to git de kind o’ look on dat picter you ’s workin’ on dere, suh, as sweet as dat chile’s face when she said dat to me. I loved her from dat fust minute I see her, an' I loved her ever since, jes' as I loved her mother befo' her.

"When she got to de house, me a-totin' de things on behind, de mist'ess come out on de po'ch.

" 'Oh, dat 's you, is it, Nannie ? ' she says. ' Well, Chloe 'll tell ye where to go, ' an' she went straight in de house agin. Never kissed her, nor touched her, nor nuffin !

" Ole Sam was bilin'. He heard her say it, an' if he was alive he 'd tell ye same as me.

" 'Where 's she gwine to sleep ? ' I says, callin' after her, — ' upstairs 'long wid Miss Rachel ? ' I was gittin' hot myse'f, though I did n't say nuffin.

" 'No,' she says, flingin' up her head like a goat ; ' my daughter needs all de room she 's got. You kin take her downstairs an' fix up a place for her 'longside o' you an' Dinah.' She was de old cook.

" 'Come 'long,' I says, ' Miss Nannie, ' an' I dropped a curtsy same 's if she was a princess. An' so she was, an' Marse Henry's own eyes in her head, an' 'nough like him to be his own chile. 'I'll hab ev'ything ready for ye,' I says. ' You wait here an' take de air, ' an' I got a chair an' sot her down on de po'ch, an' ole

Sam brung her some cake, an' I went to git de room ready, de room offen de kitchen pantry, where dey puts de overseer's chillen when dey come to see him.

“ Purty soon Miss Rachel come down an' went up an' kissed her — dat is, Sam said so, though I ain't never seen her kiss her dat time nor no other time. Miss Rachel an' de mist'ess was bofe split out o' de same piece o' kindlin', an' what one was agin t' other was agin; a blind man could see dat. Miss Rachel never liked Miss Nannie from de fust, she was dat cross-grained and pernicketty. No matter what Miss Nannie done to please her it warn't good 'nough for her. Why, do you know, when de other chillen come over from de nex' plantation Miss Rachel would n't send for Miss Nannie to come in de parlor. No, suh, dat she would n't! An' dey 'd run off an' leave her, too, when dey was gwine picknickin', an' treat dat chile ow-dacious, sayin' she was po' white trash, an' charity chile, an' things like dat, till I would go an' tell Marse Henry 'bout it. Den dere would be a 'ruction, an' Marse Henry 'd blaze out, an' jes 's soon 's he was off agin to Frankfort — an' he was dere mos' of de time, for he was one o' dese yere ole-timers dat dey could n't git 'long widout at de Legislater — dey 'd treat her wus 'n ever. Soon 's Dinah an' me see dat, we kep' Miss Nannie 'long wid us much as we could. She 'd eat wid 'em when dere warn't no company 'round, but dat was 'bout all."

"Did they send her to school?" I asked, fearing she would again lose the thread. My picture had a new meaning for me now that it looked like her heroine.

"No, suh, dat dey did n't, 'cept to de schoolhouse at de cross-roads whar eve'ybody's chillen went. But dey sent Miss Rachel to a real highty-tighty school, dat dey did, down to Louisville. Two winters she was dere, an' eve'y time when she come home for holiday times she had mo' airs dan when she went away. Marse Henry wanted bofe chillen to go, but dat woman outdid him, an' she faced him up an' down dat dere warn't money 'nough for two, an' dat her daughter was de fittenest, an' all dat, an' he give in. I did n't hear it, but ole Sam did, an' his han' shook so he mos' spilt de soup. But law, honey, dat did n't make no diff'ence to Miss Nannie. She 'd go off by herse'f wid her books an' sit all day under de trees, an' sing to herse'f jes' like a bird, an' dey 'd sing to her, an' all dat time her face was a-beamin' an' her hair shinin' like gold, an' she a-growin' taller, an' her eyes gittin' bigger an' bigger, an' brighter, an' her little footses white an' cunnin' as a rabbit's.

"De only place whar she did go outside de big house was over to Mis' Morgan's, who lived on de nex' plantation. Mis' Morgan did n't hab no chillen of her own, an' she 'd send for Miss Nannie to come an' keep her company, she was dat dead lonesome, an' dey was glad 'nough to let dat chile go so dey could git her out o' de house. Ole Sam allers said dat, for he heared 'em talk at table an' knowed what was gwine on.

"Purty soon long come de time when Miss Rachel done finish her eddication, an' she come back to de big house an' sot herse'f up to 'ceive company. She warn't bad lookin' in dem days, I mus' say, an' if dat woman's sperit had n't 'a' been in her she might 'a' pulled through. But dere warn't no fotching up could stand agin dat blood. Miss Rachel 'd git dat ornery dat you could n't do nuffin wid her, jes' like her maw. De fust real out-an'-out beau she had was Dr. Tom Boling. He lived 'bout fo'teen miles out o' Lexin'ton on de big plantation, an' was de richest young man in our parts. His paw had died 'bout two years befo' an' lef' him mo' money dan he could th'ow away, an' he 'd jes' come back from Philadelphy, whar he 'd been a-learnin' to be a doctor. He met Miss Rachel at a party in Louisville, an' de fust Sunday she come home he driv over to see her. If ye could 'a' seen de mist'ess when she see him comin' in de gate! All in his ridin' boots an' his yaller breeches and bottle-green coat, an' his servant a-ridin' behind to hold de horses.

"Ole Sam an' me was a-watchin' de mist'ess peekin' th'ough de blind at him, her eyes a-blazin', an' Sam laughed so he had to stuff a napkin in his mouf to keep 'er from hearin' him. Well, suh, dat went on all de summer. Eve'y time he come de mist'ess 'd be dat sweet mos' make a body sick to see her, an' when he 'd stay away she was dat pesky dere warn't no livin' wid her. Of co'se dere was plenty mo' gemmen co'rting Miss Rachel, too, but none o' dem did n't count wid de mist'ess 'cept de doctor, 'cause he was rich, dat 's all dere was to 't, 'cause he was rich. I tell ye ole Sam had to tell many a lie to the other gemmen, sayin' Miss Rachel was sick or somethin' else when she was a-waitin' for de doctor to come, and was feared he might meet some of 'em an' git skeered away.

"Miss Nannie, she 'd watch him, too, from behind de kitchen door, or scrunched down lookin' over de pantry winder sill, an' den she 'd tell Dinah an' me what he did, an' how he got off his horse an' han' de reins to de boy, an' slap his boots wid his ridin' whip, like he was a-dustin' off a fly. An' she 'd act it all out for me an' Dinah, an' slap her own frock, an' den she 'd laugh fit to kill herse'f an' dance all 'round de kitchen. Would yo' believe it? No! dere ain't nobody 'd believe it. Dey never asked her to come in once while he was in de parlor, an' dey never once tole him dat Miss Nannie was a-livin' on de top side o' de yearth!

“ 'Co'se people 'gin to talk, an' ev'ybody said dat Dr. Boling was gittin' nighest de coon, an' dat fust thing dey 'd know dere would be a weddin' in de Gordon fambly. An' den agin dere was plenty mo' people said he was only passin' de time wid Miss Rachel, an' dat he come to see Marse Henry to talk pol'tics.

“ Well, one day, suh, I was a-standin' in de door an' I see him come in a-foot, widout his horse an' servant, an' step up on de po'ch quick an' rap at de do', like he say to himse'f, 'Lemme in; I'm in a hurry; I got somethin' on my mind.' Ole Sam was jes' a-gwine to open de do' for him when Miss Nannie come a-runnin' in de kitchen from de yard, her cheeks like de roses, her hair a-flyin', an' her big hat hangin' to a string down her back. I gin Sam one look an' he stopped, an' I says to Miss Nannie, 'Run, honey,' I says, 'an' open de do' for ole Sam; I spec', I says, 'it's one o' dem pedlars.'

"If you could 'a' seen dat chile's face when she come back!"

Aunt Chloe's hands were now waving above her head, her mouth wide open in her merriment, every tooth shining.

"She was white one minute an' red as a beet de nex'. 'Oh, Aunt Chloe, what did you let me go for?' she says. 'Oh! I would n't 'a' let him see me like dis for anythin' in de wo'ld! Oh, I'm dat put out!'

"'What did he say to ye, honey?' I says.

"'He did n't say nuffin; he jes' look at me an' say he beg my pardon, an' was Miss Rachel in, an' den I said I 'd run an' tell her, an' when I come downstairs agin he was a-standin' in de hall wid his eyes up de staircase, an' he never stopped lookin' at me till I come down.'

"'Well, dat won't do you no harm, chile,' I says; 'a cat kin look at a king.'

"Ole Sam was a-watchin' her, too, an' when she 'd gone in her leetle room an' shet de do' Sam says, 'I'll lay if Marse Tom Boling had anythin' on his mind when he come here to-day it's mighty onsettled by dis time.'

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

“Nex’ time Dr. Tom Boling come he say to de mist’ess, ‘Who ’s dat young lady,’ he says, ‘dat opened de door for me las’ time I was here ? I hoped to see her agin. Is she in ?’

“Den dey bofe cooked up some lie ’bout her bein’ over to Mis’ Morgan’s or somethin’, an’ as soon ’s he was gone dey come down an’ riz Sam for not ’tendin’ de door, an’ lettin’ dat ragged, flyaway gal open it. Den dey went for Miss Nannie till dey made her cry, an’ she come to me, an’ I took her in my lap an’ comfo’ted her like I allers did.

“De nex’ time he come he says, ‘I hear dat yo’r niece, Miss Nannie Barnes, is livin’ wid you, an’ dat she is ve’y ’sclusive. I hope dat you ’ll ’suade her to come inde parlor,’ he says. Dem was his ve’y words. Sam was a-standin’ close to him as I am to you an’ he heared him.

“‘She ain’t yet in s’ciety,’ de mist’ess says, ‘an’ she ’s dat wild dat we can’t p’esent her.’

“‘No,’ she says, ‘she ’s over to Mis’ Morgan’s.’

“Dat was a fac’ dis time ; she ’d gone dat very mawnin’. Den Miss Rachel come down, an’ co’sse Sam did n’t hear no mo’ ’cause he had to go out. Purty soon out de doctor come.

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

Dese visits, min' ye, was gittin' shorter an' shorter, though he do come as often, an' over he goes to Mis' Morgan's hisse'f.

"Now I doan' know what he said to Miss Nannie, or what passed 'twixt 'em, 'cause she did n't tell me. Only dat she said he had come to see Mis' Morgan 'bout some land matters, an' dat Mis' Morgan interjuced 'em, but nuffin mo'. Lord bless dat chile ! An', suh, dat was de fust time she ever kep' anythin' from her ole mammy. Dat made me mo' glad 'n ever. I knowed den dey was bofe hit.

"But my lan', de fur begin to fly when de mist'ess an' Miss Rachel heared 'bout dat visit !

" 'What you mean by makin' eyes at Dr. Boling ? Don't you know he 's good as 'gaged to my daughter ? ' de mist'ess said. Dat was a lie, for he never said a word to Miss Rachel ; ole Sam could tole you dat. 'Git out o' my house, you good-for-nothin' pauper, an' take yo' rags wid ye.'

"I see right away de fat was in de fire. Marse Henry warn't spected home till de nex' Sunday, an' so I tuk her over to Mis' Morgan, an' den I ups an' tells her eve'ything dat woman had done to dat chile since de day she come. An' when I 'd done she tuk Miss Nannie by de han' an' she says, —

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA

“ ‘You won’t never want a home, chile, so long as I live. Go back, Chloe, an’ git her clo’es.’ But I did n’t git ’em. I knowed Marse Henry ’d raise de roof when he come, an’ he did, bless yo’ heart. Went over hisse’f an’ got her, an’ brought her home, an’ dat night when Dr. Boling come he made her sit down in de parlor, an’ ’fo’ he went home dat night de doctor he say to Marse Henry, ‘I want yo’ permission, Mister Gordon, to pay my addresses to Miss Nannie, yo’ niece.’ Sam was a-standing close as he could git to de door, an’ he heard ev’y word. Now he ain’t never said dat, mind ye, to Marse Henry ’bout Miss Rachel! An’ dat’s why I know dat he warn’t hit unto death wid her.

“ Well, do you know, suh, dat dat woman was dat owdacious she would n’t let ’em see each other after dat ’cept on de front po’ch. Would n’t let ’em come in de house ; make ’em do all dere co’rtin’ on de steps an’ out at de paster gate. De doctor would r’are an’ pitch an’ git white in de face at de scand’lous way dat Miss Barnes was bein’ treated, until Miss Nannie put bofe her li’l han’s on his’n, soothin’ like, an’ den he ’d grab ’em an’ kiss ’em like he ’d eat ’em up. Sam cotched him at it, an’ done tole me ! An’ den dey ’d sa’nter off down de po'ch, sayin' it was too hot or too cool, or dat dey was lookin' for birds' nests in de po'ch vines, till dey 'd git to de far end, where de mist'ess nor Sam nor nobody else could n't hear what dey was a-sayin' an' a-whisperin', an' dere dey 'd sit fer hours.

"But I tell ye de doctor had a hard time a-gittin' her even when Marse Henry gin his consent. An' he never would 'a' got her if Miss Rachel, jes' for spite, I spec', had n't 'a' took up wid Colonel Todhunter's son dat was a-co'rtin' on her too, an' run off an' married him. Den Miss Nannie knowed she was free to follow her own heart.

"I tell you it 'd 'a' made ye cry yo' eyes out, suh, to see dat chile try an' fix herse'f up to meet him de days an' nights she knowed he was comin', an' she wid jes' one white frock to her name. An' we all felt jes' as bad as her. Dinah would wash it an' I 'd smooth her hair, an' ole Sam 'd git her a fresh rose to put in her neck.

"Purty soon de weddin' day was 'pinted, an' me an' Dinah an' ole Sam gin to wonder how dat chile was a-gwine to git clo'es to be married in. Sam heared ole marster ask dat same question at de table, an' he see him gib de mist'ess de money to buy 'em for her, an' de mist'ess said dat she reckoned 'Miss Nannie's people would want de priv'lege o' dressin' her now dat she was a-gwine to marry dat wo'thless young doctor, Tom Boling, dat nobody would n't hab in de house, but dat if dey did n't she 'd gin her some of Miss Rachel's clo'es, an' if dem warn't 'nough den she 'd spen' de money to de best advantage.' Dem was her ve'y words. Sam heared her say 'em. I knowed dat meant dat de chile would go naked, for she would n't 'a' worn none o' Miss Rachel's rubbish, an' not a cent would she git o' de money. So I got dat ole white frock out, an' Dinah found a white ribbon in a ole trunk in de garret, an' washed an' ironed it to tie 'round her waist, an' Miss Nannie come an' look at it, an' when she see it de tears riz up in her eyes.

" 'Doan' you cry, chile,' I says. 'He ain't lovin' ye for yo' clo'es, an' never did. Fust time he see ye yo' was purty nigh barefoot. It's you he wants, not yo' frocks, honey ; ' an' den de sun come out in her face an' her eyes dried up, an' she 'gin to smile an' sing like a robin after de rain.

" 'Purty soon 'long come Chris'mas time, an' me an' ole Sam an' Dinah was a-watchin' out to see what Marse Tom Boling was gwine to gin his bride, fur she was purty nigh dat, as dey was to be married de week after Chris'-mas. Well, suh, de mawnin' 'fore Chris'mas come, an' den de arternoon come, an' den de night come, an' mos' ev'y hour somebody sent somethin' for Miss Rachel, an' yet not one scrap of nuffin big as a chink-a-pin come for Miss Nannie. Dinah an' me was dat onres'less dat we could n't sleep. Miss Nannie did n't say nuffin when she went to bed, but I see a li'l shadder creep over her face an' I knowed right away what hurted her.

"Well, de nex' mawnin' — Chris'mas mawnin' dat was — old Sam came a-bustin' in de kitchen do', a-hollerin' loud as he could holler." Aunt Chloe was now rocking herself back and forth, clapping her hands as she talked. "Dere was a trunk on de front po'ch for Miss Nannie dat was dat heavy it tuk fo' niggers to lif' it.

"I run, an' Dinah run, an' when we got to de trunk mos' all de niggers was thick 'round it as flies, an' Miss Nannie was standin' over it readin' a card wid her name on it an' a 'scription sayin' dat it was 'a Chris'mas gif', wid de compliments of a friend.' But who dat friend was, whether it was Marse Henry, who sent it dat way so dat woman would n't tear his hair out; or whether Mis' Morgan sent it, dat had n't mo'n 'nough money to live on; or whether some of her own kin in Indiany, dat was dirt po', stole de money an' sent it; or whether young Dr. Tom Boling, who had mo' money dan all de banks in Lexin'ton, done sent it, don't nobody know till this day, 'cept me an' ole Sam, an' we ain't tellin'.

"But, my soul alive, de insides of dat trunk took de bref clean out o' de mist'ess an' Miss Rachel. Sam opened it, an' I tuk out de things. Honey! dere was a weddin' dress all white satin dat would stand alone, —jes' de ve'y mate of de one you got in dat picter 'fore ye, —an' a change'ble silk, dat heavy! an' a plaid one, an' eve'ything a young lady could git on her back from her skin out! an' a thousand-dollar watch an' chain. I wore dat watch myse'f; Miss Nannie was standin' by me, a-clappin' her han's an' laughin', an' when dat watch an' chain came out she jes' th'owed de chain over my neck an' stuck de leetle watch in my bosom, an' says, 'Dere, you dear ole mammy, go look at yo'se'f in de glass an' see how fine you is.'

"De nex' week come de weddin'. I'll never forgit dat weddin' to my dyin' day. Marse Tom Boling driv in wid a coach an' four an' two outriders, an' de horses wore white ribbons on dere ears ; an' de coachman had flowers in his coat mos' big as his head, an' dey whirled up in front of de po'ch, an' out he stepped in his blue coat an' brass buttons an' a yaller wais'coat, — yaller as a gourd, — an' his bell-crown hat in his han'. She was a-waitin' for him wid dat white satin dress on, an' de chain 'round her neck, an' her li'l footses tied up wid silk ribbons de ve'y match o' dem you got pictered, an' her face shinin' like a angel. An' all de niggers was a-standin' 'roun' de po'ch, dere eyes outn dere heads, an' Marse Henry was dere in his new clo'es lookin' so grand, an' Sam in his white gloves, an' me in a new head han'chief.

“Eve'ybody was happy 'cept one. Dat one was de mist'ess, standin' in de door. She would n't come out to de coach where de horses was a-champin' de bits an' de froth a-droppin' on de groun', an' she would n't speak to Marse Tom. She kep' back in de do'way.

“Miss Nannie gib Marse Tom Boling her han' an' look up in his face like a queen, an' den she kissed Marse Henry, an' whispered some-thin' in his ear dat nobody did n't hear, only de tears gin to jump out an' roll down his cheeks,

"EVE'YBODY WAS HAPPY 'CEPT ONE. DAT ONE WAS DE MIST'ESS STANDIN' IN DE DOOR,"

an' den she looked de mist'ess full in de face, an' 'thout a word dropped her a low curtsy.

"I come de las'. She looked at me for a minute wid her eyes a-swimmin', an' den she th'owed her arms roun' my neck an' hugged an' kissed me, an' den I see an arm slip 'roun' her wais' an' lif' her in de coach. Den de horses gin a plunge an' dey was off.

"An' arter dat dey had five years — de happiest years dem two ever seen. I know, 'cause Marse Henry gin me to her, an' I lived wid 'em day in an' day out till dat baby come, an' den " —

Aunt Chloe stopped and reached out her hand as if to steady herself. The tears were streaming down her cheeks.

Then she advanced a step, fixed her eyes on the portrait, and in a voice broken with emotion, said, —

"Honey, chile, — honey, chile, — is you tired a-waitin' for yo' ole 'mammy? Keep a-watchin', honey — keep a-watchin' — It won't be long now 'fore I come. Keep a-watchin'."

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

SQUANTICO was not my destination. I confess to hearing from my berth in the Pullman, when the train stopped in the depot, all the customary sounds, — the bumpings and couplings of the cars, the relieved “Whuff!” of the locomotive catching its breath after the night’s run, the shouts of the hackmen, and the rumbling of the baggage trucks. I remember also the “Dust you off, sir,” of the suddenly attentive porter levying blackmail with his brush, the glare of the lanterns, and blinding flash of the head-light. All this came to me as I lay half awake in my section, but—it did not suggest Squantico.

On the contrary, it meant prospective peace and comfort, and another hour’s nap, when I would finally be side-tracked outside the station in Washington. So I turned over and enjoyed it.

Experience teaches me that the going astray of the best laid plans is not confined wholly to men and mice; it includes Pullmans.

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

My first intimation of disaster came from the expectant blackmailer.

“Eight o’clock, sir; last berth occupied.”

More positive data proceeded from the conductor, who clicked a punch under my nose and blurted out, —

“Tickets!”

I fumbled mechanically under my pillow, and remembering, said sleepily, —

“Not to me. Want your tickets for Richmond.”

I sat up. Whole rows of people dressed for the day were quietly and contentedly occupying their seats. All the berths had been swept away. My curtains alone dangled from the continuous brass rod. Every eye in the car was fastened on my travelling bedroom.

“I am not going to Richmond. I get off at Washington.”

“Stop at the next station,” I gasped, grabbing my coat.

The conductor peered through the car window, pulled the bell-rope, and shouted, “All out for Squantico!” Ten minutes later I was shivering in a pool of snow and water, my bag bottom side up, the rear of the retreating train filling a distant cut.

A man in a fur hat and blue overcoat cast his eye my way, picked up a mail pouch from a half-melted snowbank, and preceded me up a muddy road flanked by a worm-fence. I overtook him, and added my bag to his load.

“When can I get back to Washington?”

“Ten minutes past two.”

I made a hurried calculation. Six hours! Six hours in a hole like this!

It was not a cheery morning for landing anywhere. January-thaw mornings never are. A drizzling rain saturated everything. A steaming fog hung over the low country, drifted out over the river, and made ghosts of the piles of an unfinished dock. The mud was inches deep under the snow, which lay sprawling out in patches, covering the ground like a worn-out coat. A dozen cheaply constructed houses and stores built of wood fronted on one side of a broad road. Opposite the group was a great barn of a building, with its doors and lower windows boarded up. This was the hotel.

Before I had turned the road I had learned all that could possibly interest me: the hotel was closed; Colonel Jarvis kept a store third house from the corner ; and Mrs. Jarvis could get me a breakfast.

The man with the pouch exchanged my bag for a dime, pointed to a collection of empty dry-goods boxes ranged along the sidewalk ahead, and disappeared within a doorway bearing a swinging tin sign marked "Post-Office." I rounded the largest box, climbed the steps, and entered the typical country store.

"Is Colonel Jarvis in?"

Four men hugging a cast-iron stove pushed back their chairs. One — a lank, chin-bearded Virginian — straightened himself out and came forward. He wore a black slouch hat, a low-cut velvet vest with glass buttons, — all gone but two, — a shoestring necktie, and a pair of carpet slippers very much run down at the heel. The only redeeming points about him were his voice, which though clogged with the richest of Virginia dialects was still soft and flexible, and his manners, in which were visible some slight out-croppings of a gentility buried with the preceding generation. Regarded from the point of view of a traveller half awake, hungry, wet, and wholly disgusted, his appearance only helped to intensify the discomforts of the situation.

"I'm Kurnal Jarvis, zur. What kin I do for you?"

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

"I am adrift here, and cannot return for some hours. The mail man said perhaps Mrs. Jarvis would get me a cup of coffee."

The colonel smiled unctuously ; replied, with a wave of his hand, that he did not keep a hotel, or in fact a house of entertainment of any kind, but that since the closing — he should say the collapse — of the Ocomoke Hotel he had prevailed upon Mrs. Jarvis to spread a humble table for the comfort and restoration of the wayfarer and stranger. If I would do him the honor of preceding him through the folding-doors to the right, he would conduct me to Mrs. Jarvis, a chop, and a cup of coffee.

I did him the honor at once, and was the next moment confronted by a little woman in a brown calico dress, who hung my wet coat on a clothes-horse by the fire with so many expressions of sympathy that my heart was won on the spot.

The breakfast was fairly good, although the vivid imagination of the colonel was not wholly realized, — Mrs. Jarvis substituting hot corn bread and a sliver of bacon for the chop, and filling my cup with a weak decoction of toasted sweet-potato skins and chiccory in place of the divine essence of old Mocha.

Comforted by her gentle manner, and glad of any excuse to kill time until the 2.10 train should rescue me from what promised to be a most forlorn experience, I drew from her, little by little, not only her own history, but that of her unfortunate neighbors.

It seemed that some years back a capitalist from New York, uniting with other money-bags from Richmond, had fixed upon the town of Squantico as presenting, by reason of its location, extraordinary advantages for river and rail transportation; that, in pursuance of this scheme, they had bought up all the land in and around the village, had staked out numerous avenues and town lots, erected an imposing hotel surmounted by a cupola, and had started an immense pile dock trampling out into the river; that they had surveyed and partly graded a certain railroad, described as a "sixty-pound steel-rail and iron-bridge road," having one terminus on the wandering dock and the other in a network of arteries connecting with the "heart of the whole Southern system;" that, besides these local and contiguous improvements, such small trifles as a court house of granite, a public school of brick with stone trimmings, and extensive waterworks were to be at once erected and ridiculously cheap gas introduced. All these enlargements, improvements, and benefits were duly set forth in a large circular, or handbill, with headlines in red ink, — a fly-specked copy being still visible tacked up behind the colonel's bar. In addition to these gratuities, large discounts were offered to the earliest settlers purchasing town lots and erecting structures thereon, the terms being within reach of the poorest, — one fourth cash, and the balance in three yearly instalments of an equal amount.

Beguiled by these conditions and prospects, the colonel had sold her farm on the James River, — it was all she had in the world, an inheritance from her father's estate, — had moved their household effects to Squantico, paid the first instalment, and erected the store and dwelling. This had absorbed all their ready cash.

All went well for the first year, or until the hotel was finished. Then came the collapse. One morning all work ceased on the dock and railroad. Another capitalist, of pointedly opposite views from the original group of projectors, had gobbled up the road-bed of the projected railway, and had carried its terminus far out of reach of Squantico, and miles down the river. This had occurred some three years back.

Since that date a complicated melancholy had settled down over Squantico; the proprietors of the hotel had closed its doors from sheer famine, — not so much from want of something to eat as for want of somebody to eat it, — the unfinished dock had gone to decay, and the town to ruin. Squantico had shrivelled up like a gourd in a September frost.

Nor was this all. Since the collapse no one had been able to meet the second payment on the land ; the original capitalists wanted their pound of flesh ; foreclosure proceedings had already been begun, and the act of dispossession was to be taken at the next spring term of the county court. Everybody in the village was in the same plight. “ And indeed, sir,” she added with a break in her voice, “ what is to become of us ? It will seem so hard to have no home at all ! ”

I did what I could to divert her thoughts from her impending misfortunes by telling her something of my trip the night before, extracting for her benefit what little humor the situation afforded, and then, leaving her to the care of her dishes, returned to the store.

The colonel widened the circle about the stove, nodded to the three other chair-holders, and introduced me as “ My friend, Major ” — and paused for my name. As I did not supply it, he glanced toward my bag for relief, caught sight of a baggage label pasted across one end, marked " B., Room —, N. Y.," and went straight on, as serene as an auctioneer with a fictitious bid.

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

" Broom, — Major Broom, — gentlemen, from New York."

The occupants stood erect for an instant, looked at me from under the rims of their hats, and sank into their chairs again.

If the title was a surprise to me, I being a plain landscape-painter, without capitals of any kind before or after my patronymic, the effrontery of displacing it by an express company's check simply took away my breath. But I did not correct him. It was not worth the while. He thanked me with his eye for my forbearance, and placed a chair at my disposal.

This eye of the colonel, by the way, was not the least interesting feature of his face. It was a moist, watery eye, suggestive of a system of accounts kept mostly in chalk on a set of books covering half the swinging doors in the county. From between these watery spots protruded a sharp, beak-like nose.

My host connected these two features by placing his forefinger longitudinally along his nose until the nail closed the right optic, and remarked, in a dry, husky voice, that it was about his time, and would I join him? Instantly three pairs of legs dropped from the stove rail, an equal number of chairs were emptied, and their occupants filed through a green door with the paint worn off below the knob. I excused myself on the ground of a late breakfast, and while they were absent made an inspection of the interior. It consisted of one long room, on each side of which ran a pine counter. This was littered up with scraps of wrapping paper, a mouldy cheese covered by a wire fly screen, some cracker boxes, and a case with a glass top containing small piles of plug tobacco and some jars of stick candy. Behind these counters were ranged pine shelves, holding the usual assortment of hardware, dry goods, canned vegetables, and groceries. On the bottom shelf lay a grillage of bar soap, left out to dry. All the top shelves were packed with empty boxes, — labels outside, — indicating to the unpracticed eye certain probable commercial resources.

Outside the rain fell in a drizzle, and the fog settled in wavy wreaths. Along the road staggered a single team — horse and mule tandem — harnessed, or rather tied up, in clotheslines, and drawing a cart as large as a shoe box, loaded with cord-wood, the whole followed by a negro clothed in cowhide boots, an old army coat, and a straw hat. The movement was slow, but sure enough to convince me that they had not all died in their tracks overnight.

I followed this team with my eye until the fog swallowed it up ; watched a flock of geese pick their way across the road, the leader's nose high in the air, as if disgusted with the day ; went over in my mind the delay of preparing the breakfast, the time lost in its disposal, the long talk with Mrs. Jarvis, and my many experiences since, and concluded that it must be high noon. I looked at my watch, and a chill crept down my spine. It was but a quarter past nine !

Five hours more !

Disheartened but not wholly cast down, I rummaged over a lot of wrapping paper, borrowed a pencil, and made outline sketches of some pigeons drying their feathers under the eaves of the stable roof ; interviewed the boy feeding the pigs ; listened enviously to their contented grunts ; and at last, in sheer desperation, returned to the store and sat down. The hours were leaden. Would I never get away ? Soon I began to have murderous intentions toward the porter. I remembered his exact expression when he promised the night before to wake me at eight o'clock. I could have sworn, on thinking it over, that he knew I was in the wrong car, and had concealed the fact, tempted by the opulence expressed in my new London bag. I felt that it had all been a devilish scheme to rob me of a double quarter, and throw me out into the mud in this thaw-stricken town.

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

In my broodings I began to take in the colonel, following his movements around the store, wondering whether he was not in the conspiracy, and had set the clock back to insure my missing the train.

A moment's reflection convinced me of the absurdity of all my misgivings, and I resolved to rise to the occasion. Mark Tapley could have made a gala day of it. I would brace up and study the citizens.

The colonel was waiting on a customer, — the only real one I had seen, — a mulatto girl with a jug.

“Where 's the thimble?” said the colonel.

The colonel sighed.

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

While he was filling the jug, an old man in an overcoat made from a gray army blanket, and dragging by the muzzle a long Kentucky rifle, straggled in and asked for a box of percussion caps and half a pound of powder. Then resting his shooting-iron against the counter, and pushing his long, skinny, cramped hands through his coat-sleeves, he opened out his thin fingers before the stove and ventured the remark that it was "right smart chilly."

"Any game, uncle?" I inquired.

"Mostly turkeys, zur; but they's gittin' miz'ble sca'ce lately. 'Fo' de wah 't warn't nuthin' to git a passel of turkeys 'fore break-fas'. But you can't git 'em now. Dese yer scand'l'us-back ducks is mo' plenty than they wuz; but ther ain't no gret shucks on 'em nary way."

The colonel handed the old man his ammunition, replaced a cracker box, threw his legs over the counter, and took the chair next me, his heels on the rail.

"Here on business, Major?"

"No, pleasure," I replied wearily.

"Sorry the weather is so bad, zur; Squantico is not looking its best. Had you been here some few years ago, it would have looked different to you, zur."

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

“ You mean before the scheme started ? ”

“ Scheme or swindle, either way, zur. Perhaps you know Mr. Isaac Hoyle ? ”

I expressed my ignorance.

“ Or have heard of the Squantico Land and Improvement Company ? ”

I was equally at fault, except what I had learned through Mrs. Jarvis.

“ Then, zur, you are in no way connected with the gang of scoundrels who would rob us of our homes ? ”

I assured him that he had hit it exactly.

“ Allow me to shake you by the han', zur, and offer you an apology. We took you for a lawyer, zur, from New York, come down about these fo'closure proceedin's. Will you join me ? ” All the legs came down simultaneously with a bang, but my firmness prevailed, and they were slowly elevated once more.

“ What are you going to do about the matter ? ” I asked.

“ What can we do, zur ? We are bound hand and foot. We are prostrate, zur, prostrate.”

“ Do ? ” said I, a ray of hope lighting up my spirits. Perhaps, after all, there were mitigating circumstances about this enforced detention of mine. “ Would you have built this house if Hoyle had not agreed to build his railroad ? ”

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

"Of co'se not," said the colonel.

"Did he build?"

"Not a foot."

"Did you?"

"Certainly."

"Well, then, Colonel, sue Hoyle."

The colonel rose from his chair and fixed upon me his drier eye. The loungers straightened up and formed a circle.

"Are there any waterworks, granite school-houses, city halls, and other such metropolitan luxuries around?" I continued.

The colonel shook his head.

"Had these been erected, and had the programme as marked out in that bespattered circular behind your door been carried out, would you be as poor as you are, or would you not now have a warehouse across the road to hold your surplus stock, and three wagons constantly backed up before your door to serve your customers? I tell you, sue Isaac Hoyle."

"Kurnal," said Jarvis, — I did not correct the promotion, — "would you have any objection to elucidate yo' views befo' some of our leadin' citizens? They indicate a grasp of this subject, zur, which is giant-like, — yez, zur, giant-like! Jedge Drummond and Gen'ral Lownes are at this moment in the post-office,

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

—two ve'y remarkable men, zur, quite our fo'most citizens. Might I send for 'em? "

"I would be delighted to meet the gentlemen." It might consume an hour. "Send for them, my dear sir; nothing would give me greater pleasure."

"Here, Joe," said the colonel, calling a negro who had lounged in from the road, and was now hovering on the outside of the circle; "g'w'up to the post-office, and tell Jedge Drummond and Gen'ral Lownes to come yer quick." The boy shuffled out, and Jarvis laid his hand on my shoulder. "It's a pleasure, kurnal, a gen-u-ine pleasure, zur, to meet a man of yo' calibre. Allow me to grasp yo' han', and ask you before the arrival of my friends to" —

There was a slight movement toward the green door with the paint worn off, but I checked it before the sentence was complete.

"No! Well, zur, we will make it later. By the way, kurnal, before I forget it," — the colonel locked his arm through mine and led me aside, — "do not offer Mrs. Jarvis any compensation for yo' breakfast. She comes of a very high family, zur, and has a very sensitive nature. Of course, if you insist, I" — and my trade dollar dropped without a sound into his desolate pocket. "Here, boy ! Did you fin' the gentlemen? "

"De gin'ral done gone duckin', sah, 'fore daylight, but the jedge say he is comin' right away scat."

The judge was on the boy's heels. As he entered, his eye wandered restlessly toward the paint-worn door. He had evidently misunderstood the message. I arose to greet him, the ring of listeners widening out to do justice to the impending ceremony. While the colonel squared himself for the opening address, I took in the general outline of the judge. He was the exact opposite of my host, — a short, fat, shad-shaped man of some fifty years or more, whose later life had been spent in a ceaseless effort to keep his clothes up snug around the waist, his failures above being recorded in the wrinkles of his almost buttonless coat, and his successes below in the bagging of his trousers at the knee. He wore low shoes that did not match, and white cotton stockings a week old. A round, good-natured face, ornamented by a mustache dyed brown and a stump of a cigar, surmounted the whole.

"Jedge Drummond," began the colonel, "I sent my servant for you, zur, to introduce you to my ve'y particular friend, Gen'ral Broom, of the metropolis, zur, who is visiting the South, and who dropped in upon us this morning to breakfast. Gen'ral Broom, zur, is one of the most remark'ble men of the day, and, although a soldier like ourselves, has devoted himself since the wah to the practice of the law, and now stands at the zenith, the ve'y zenith, zur, of his p'ofession."

The judge expressed himself as overwhelmed, extended three fingers, and corrugated his vest pattern into wrinkles in the effort to squeeze himself between the arms of a chair. Jarvis then continued, —

"Gen'ral Broom is deeply interested in the misfortunes which have overtaken Squantico, and has given expression to some ideas lookin' to'ards our vested rights which are startlin', zur. Gen'ral, will you kindly repeat yo' views to the jedge? "

I did so briefly. To my mind it was simply a matter of contract. A grasping land company had staked out a comparative wilderness, and as an inducement to innocent investors and settlers had made certain promises, which, under the circumstances, were binding agreements. These agreements covered the erection of certain important municipal buildings, public conveniences and improvements, together with a hotel, a dock, and a railroad. Only a fraction, a very small fraction, of these had been carried out. I would remind them, furthermore, that these agreements were distributed broadcast, and if not in writing, were in print, which in this case was the same thing. Relying on these documents, certain capitalists, like my friend Colonel Jarvis, had invested a very large portion of their surplus in erecting structures suitable only for a city of considerable commercial importance. The result was a matter of history. Squantico had yielded to a pressure greater than she could bear.

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

Judge Drummond closed both eyes as if in deep thought, shifted his cigar, and remarked that the argument "was a sledge-hammer." He was delighted at the opportunity of knowing a man with so colossal a grasp.

The store began filling up, — the hurried exit of the boy and the instantaneous return of the judge having had its effect on the several citizens who had witnessed the occurrence. With each new arrival I was obliged to make a fresh statement, the colonel enlarging upon my abilities and rank until I began to shudder lest he should land me either in the White House or upon the supreme Bench.

I was beginning afresh on the last arrival — a weazen-faced old fellow with one tooth —

when a fog-choked whistle sounded down the river, and every man except Jarvis and the judge filed out, crossed the road, and waited on the end of the unfinished dock until a wheezy side-wheel boat landed a negro woman and a yellow-painted trunk. This absorbing ceremony, paralyzing the industries of Squantico, I learned occurred every day. As soon as the excitement calmed down and order had been restored, Jarvis executed a peculiar sign with his left eye; three citizens, including the judge, understood it, followed him into a corner, consulted for a moment, and returned, the colonel leading.

"Major-Gen'ral Broom," said he, placing his hand on his heart, "yo' masterly anal'sis of our rights in this fo'closure matter convinces us that, if we are to be protected at all, we must place ourselves in yo' han's. We know that yo' duties are overwhelmin' and yo' time precious; but if you would consent to accept a retainer, and appear for these cases at the spring meeting of the county co'te in April, we shall consider them settled. What amount would you fix?"

The idea appalled me, but I was in for it. "Gentlemen," I said, "your confidence, stranger as I am to most of you, is embarrassing. As my main purpose would be to wrest from this grasping monopoly property which, if not yours, should be, I should be willing to accept only a small portion of the amount I might recover as my fee"—at this point Jarvis had great difficulty in restraining the outburst—"together— together, gentlemen, with a trifling cash payment"—the noise moderated—"which could be placed in the hands of Colonel Jarvis, to be used for preliminary expenses."

A dead silence ensued. My selection for stakeholder had evidently cast a chill over the room. This hardened into a frigid disapproval when the judge, voicing the assemblage, remarked that the "colonel would take good care of all the cash he would get." Had not Mrs. Jarvis announced dinner, the situation would have become oppressive. The colonel punctured the stillness by instantly subscribing for his proportion, and asked the judge what amount he would contribute. That legal luminary rose slowly, picked up a crumb of cheese that had escaped the fly screen, and remarking that he would look over the list of his real estate and see, left the room. An audible smile permeated the crowd when the door closed behind him, the old sportsman's share widening into a grin, with an aside all to himself:—

"Real 'state? Golly! Reckon he kearries mos' of it on his shoes."

SIX HOURS IN SQUANTICO

“My dear,” said the colonel, as we followed his wife into the dining-room, “you of co’se understan’ that to-day my old friend the gen’ral is our guest.”

That gentle lady, who had borne the heat and burden of my entertainment alone, only replied with her eyes. Dinner over, I dropped another coin of the realm into the colonel’s pocket to alleviate the loneliness of my contribution of the morning, and lifted my hat to the sad little woman, who watched us wistfully through the half-opened door, her apron over her head. Poor uncomplaining soul, I can still see her sad face. Later I took up my line of march to the station with just ten minutes to spare, the colonel carrying my bag, and about all the male population of Squantico serving as escort except the judge. He excused himself on the ground that he had “left his rubbers in his office.”

When I go South now, I pass Squantico in the night.

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

I

I FOUND the major standing in front of Delmonico's, interviewing a large, bare-headed personage in brown cloth spotted with brass buttons. The major was in search of his very particular friend, Mr. John Hardy of Madison Square, and the personage in brown and brass was rather languidly indicating, by a limp and indecisive forefinger, a route through a section of the city which, correctly followed, would have landed the major in the East River.

I knew him by the peculiar slant of his slouch hat, the rosy glow of his face, and the way in which his trousers clung to the curves of his well-developed legs, and ended in a sprawl that half covered his shoes. I recognized, too, a carpet bag, a ninety-nine-cent affair, an "occasion," with galvanized iron clasps and paper-leather sides, — the kind opened with your thumb.

The major — or, to be more definite, Major Tom Slocomb of Pocomoke — was from one of the lower counties of the Chesapeake. He was supposed to own, as a gift from his dead wife, all that remained unmortgaged of a vast colonial estate on Crab Island in the bay, consisting of several thousand acres of land and water, — mostly water, — a manor house, once painted white, and a number of outbuildings in various stages of dilapidation and decay.

In his early penniless life he had migrated from his more northern native State, settled in the county, and, shortly after his arrival, had married the relict of the late lamented Major John Talbot of Pocomoke. This had greatly surprised many eminent Pocomokians, who boasted of the purity and antiquity of the Talbot blood, and who could not look on in silence, and see it degraded and diluted by an alliance with a "harf strainer or worse." As one possible Talbot heir put it, "a picayune, lowdown corncracker, suh, without blood or breedin'."

The objections were well taken. So far as the ancestry of the Slocomb family was concerned, it was a trifle indefinite. It really could not be traced back farther than the day of the major's arrival at Pocomoke, notwithstanding the major's several claims that his ancestors came over in the Mayflower, that his grandfather fought with General Washington, and that his own early life had been spent on the James River. These statements, to thoughtful Pocomokians, seemed so conflicting and improbable, that his neighbors and acquaintances ascribed them either to that total disregard for salient facts which characterized the major's speech, or to the vagaries of that rich and vivid imagination which had made his conquest of the widow so easy and complete.

Gradually, however, through the influence of his wife, and because of his own unruffled good-humor, the antipathy had worn away. As years sped on, no one, except the proudest and loftiest Pocomokian, would have cared to trace the Slocomb blood farther back than its graft upon the Talbot tree. Neither would the major. In fact, the brief honeymoon of five years left so profound an impression upon his after life, that, to use his own words, his birth and marriage had occurred at the identical moment, — he had never lived until then.

There was no question in the minds of his neighbors as to whether the major maintained his new social position on Crab Island with more than ordinary liberality. Like all new, vigorous grafts on an old stock, he not only blossomed out with extraordinary richness, but sucked the sap of the primeval family tree quite dry in the process. In fact, it was universally admitted that could the constant drain of his hospitality have been brought clearly to the attention of the original proprietor of the estate, its draft-power would have raised that distinguished military gentleman out of his grave. "My dear friends," Major Slocomb would say, when, after his wife's death, some new extravagance was commented upon, "I felt I owed the additional slight expenditure to the memory of that queen among women, suh — Major Talbot's widow."

He had espoused, too, with all the ardor of the new settler, the several articles of political faith of his neighbors, — loyalty to the State, belief in the justice and humanity of slavery and the omnipotent rights of man, — white, of course, — and he had, strange to say, fallen into the peculiar pronunciation of his Southern friends, dropping his final g's and slurring his r's, thus acquiring that soft cadence of speech which makes their dialect so delicious.

As to his title of "Major," no one in or out of the county could tell where it originated. He had belonged to no company of militia, neither had he won his laurels on either side during the war; nor yet had the shifting politics of his State ever honored him with a staff appointment of like grade. When pressed, he would tell you confidentially that he had really inherited the title from his wife, whose first husband, as was well known, had earned and borne that military distinction; adding tenderly, that she had been so long accustomed to the honor that he had continued it after her death simply out of respect to her memory.

But the major was still interviewing Delmonico's flunky, oblivious of everything but the purpose in view, when I touched his shoulder, and extended my hand.

"God bless me! Not you? Well, by gravy! Here, now, Colonel, you can tell me where Jack Hardy lives. I've been for half an hour walkin' round this garden lookin' for him. I lost the letter with the number in it, so I came over here to Delmonico's; Jack dines here often, I know, 'cause he told me so. I was at his quarters once myself, but 't was in the night. I am completely bamboozled. Left home yesterday; brought up a couple of thoroughbred dogs that the owner wouldn't trust with anybody but me, and then, too, I wanted to see Jack."

I am not a colonel, of course, but promotions are easy with the major.

He refused, and rattled on, upbraiding me for not coming down to Crab Island last spring with the “boys” when the ducks were flying, punctuating his remarks here and there with his delight at seeing me looking so well, his joy at being near enough to Jack to shake the dear fellow by the hand, and the inexpressible ecstasy of being once more in New York, the centre of fashion and wealth, “with mo’ comfo’t to the square inch than any other spot on this terrestrial ball.”

The “boys” referred to were members of a certain “Ducking Club” situated within rifle-shot of the major’s house on the island, of which club Jack Hardy was president. They all delighted in the major’s society, really loving him for many qualities known only to his intimates.

Hardy, I knew, was not at home. This, however, never prevented his colored servant, Jefferson, from being always ready at a moment’s notice to welcome the unexpected friend. In another instant I had rung Hardy’s bell, — third on right, — and Jefferson, in faultless evening attire, was carrying the major’s “carpet bag” to the suite of apartments on the third floor front.

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

Jefferson needs a word of comment. Although born and bred a slave, he was the product of a newer and higher civilization. There was hardly a trace of the old South left in him, — hardly a mark of the pit of slavery from which he had been digged. His speech was as faultless as his dress. He was clean, close-shaven, immaculate, well-groomed, silent, — reminding me always of a mahogany-colored Greek professor, even to his eye-glasses. He kept his rooms in admirable order, and his household accounts with absolute accuracy, — never spilled a drop of claret, mixed a warm cocktail, or served a cold plate in his life; was devoted to Hardy, and so punctiliously polite to his master's friends and guests, that it was a pleasure to have him serve you.

Strange to say, this punctilious politeness had never extended to the major, and since an occurrence connected with this very bag, — to be related shortly, — it had ceased altogether. Whether it was that Jefferson had always seen through the peculiar varnish that made bright the major's veneer, or whether in an unguarded moment, on a previous visit, the major gave way to some such outburst as he would have inflicted upon the domestics of his own establishment, forgetting for the time the superior position to which Jefferson's breeding and education entitled him, I cannot say; but certain it is that while to all outward appearances Jefferson served the major with every indication of attention and humility, I could see under it all a quiet reserve which marked the line of unqualified disapproval. This was evident even in the way he carried the major's bag, — holding it out by the straps, not as became the handling of a receptacle containing a gentleman's wardrobe, but by the neck, so to speak, — as a dog to be dropped in the gutter.

It was this bag, or rather its contents, or to be more exact its lack of contents, that dulled the fine edge of Jefferson's politeness. He unpacked it, of course, with the same perfunctory care that he would have bestowed on the contents of a Bond Street Gladstone, indulging in a prolonged chuckle when he found no trace of a most important part of a gentleman's wardrobe, — none of any pattern. It was, therefore, with a certain grim humor that, when he showed the major to his room the night of his arrival, he had led gradually up to a question which the unpacking a few hours before had rendered inevitable.

“Mr. Hardy's orders are that I should inform every gentleman when he retires that there's plenty of whiskey and cigars on the sideboard, and that" — here Jefferson glanced at the bag — "and that if any gentleman came unprepared there was a night-shirt and a pair of pajams in the closet."

To which the major replied, —

"I never wore one of 'em in my life, Jefferson ; but you can put the whiskey and the cigars on the chair by my bed, in case I wake in the night."

When Jefferson, in answer to my inquiries as to how the major had passed the night, related this incident to me the following morning, I could detect, under all his deference and respect toward his master's guest, a certain manner and air plainly implying that, so far as the major and himself were concerned, every other but the most diplomatic of relations had been suspended.

The major, by this time, was in full possession of my friend's home. The only change in his dress was in the appearance of his shoes, polished by Jefferson to a point verging on patent leather, and the adoption of a black alpaca coat, which, although it wrinkled at the seams with a certain home-made air, still fitted his fat shoulders very well. To this were added a fresh shirt and collar, a white tie, nankeen vest, and the same tight-fitting, splay-footed trousers, enriched by a crease of Jefferson's own making.

As he lay sprawled out on Hardy's divan, with his round, rosy, clean-shaven face, good-humored mouth, and white teeth, the whole enlivened by a pair of twinkling eyes, I forgot for the moment that he was not really the sole owner of the establishment. Further intercourse thoroughly convinced me of a similar lapse of memory on the major's part.

"My dear Colonel, let me welcome you to my New York home!" he exclaimed, without rising from the divan. "Draw up a chair; have a mouthful of mocha? Jefferson makes it delicious. Or shall I call him to broil another po'ter-house steak? No? Then let me ring for some cigars," and he touched the bell.

To lie on a divan, reach out one arm, and, with the expenditure of less energy than would open a match-box, to press a button summoning an attendant with all the unlimited comforts of life, — juleps, cigars, coffee, cocktails, morning papers, fans, matches out of arm's reach, everything that soul could covet and heart long for; to see all these several commodities and luxuries develop, take shape, and materialize, while he lay flat on his back, — this to the major was civilization.

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

“But, Colonel, befo’ you sit down, fling yo’ eye over that garden in the square. Nature in her springtime, suh !”

I agreed with the major, and was about to take in the view over the tree-tops, when he tucked another cushion under his head, elongated his left leg until it reached the window-sill, thus completely monopolizing it, and continued without drawing a breath : —

“And I am so comfo’table here ! I had a po’ter-house steak this mornin’ — you ’re sure you won’t have one ?” I shook my head. “A po’ter-house steak, suh, that ’ll haunt my memory for days. We, of co’se, have at home every variety of fish, plenty of soft-shell crabs, and ’casionally a canvasback, when Hardy or some of my friends are lucky enough to hit one, but no meat that is wo’t’h the cookin’. By the bye, I ’ve come to take Jack home with me ; the early strawberries are in their prime, now. You will join us, of course ?”

Before I could reply, Jefferson entered the room, laid a tray of cigars and cigarettes with a small silver alcohol lamp at my elbow, and, with a certain inquiring and, I thought, slightly surprised glance at the major’s sprawling attitude, noiselessly withdrew. The major must have caught the expression on Jefferson’s face, for he dropped his telescope leg and straightened up his back, with the sudden awkward movement of a similarly placed lounge surprised by a lady in a hotel parlor. The episode seemed to knock the enthusiasm out of him for the moment, for he exclaimed in rather a subdued tone, —

“Rather remarkable nigger, this servant of Jack’s. I s’pose it is the influence of yo’ New York ways, but I am not accustomed to this kind.”

I began to defend Jefferson, but he raised both hands in protest.

“Yes, I know — education and thirty dollars a month. All very fine, but give me the old house-servants of the South — the old Anthonys, and Keziahhs, and Rachels. They never went about rigged up like a stick of black sealing-wax in a suit of black co’t-plaster. They were easy-goin’ and comfortable. Yo’ interest was their interest; they bore yo’ name, looked after yo’ children, and could look after yo’ house, too. Now see this nigger of Jack’s; he’s better dressed than I am, tips round as solemn on his toes as a marsh crane, and yet I ’ll bet a dollar he’s as slick and cold-hearted as a high-water clam. That’s what education has done for him.

“You never knew Anthony, my old butler?

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

Well, I want to tell you, he was a servant as was a servant. During Mrs. Slocomb's life " — here the major assumed a reminiscent air, pinching his fat chin with his thumb and forefinger; he was still sprawled over the divan — "we had, of co'se, a lot of niggers; but this man Anthony! By gravy! when he filled yo' glass with some of the old madeira that had rusted away in my cellar for half a century," — here the major now slipped his thumb into the arm-hole of his vest, — "it tasted like the nectar of the gods, just from the way Anthony poured it out.

"But you ought to have seen him move round 'the table when dinner was over! He 'd draw himself up like a drum-major, and throw back the mahogany doors for the ladies to retire, with an air that was captivatin'." The major now rose to his feet; his reminiscent mood was one of his best. "That 's been a good many years ago, Colonel, but I can see him now just as plain as if he stood before me, with his white cotton gloves, white vest, and green coat with brass buttons, standin' behind Mrs. Slocomb's chair. I can see the old sidebo'd, suh, covered with George III. silver, heirlooms of a century," — this with a trance-like movement of his hand across his eyes. "I can see the great Italian marble mantels suppo'ted on lions' heads, the inlaid floor and wainscotin'." Here the major sank upon the divan again, shutting both eyes reverently, as if these memories of the past were a sort of religion with him.

"And the way those niggers loved us! And the many holes they helped us out of! Sit down there, and let me tell you what Anthony did for me once." I obeyed cheerfully. "Some years ago I received a telegram from a very intimate friend of mine, a distinguished Baltimorean, — the Nestor of the Maryland bar, suh, — informin' me that he was on his way South, and that he would make my house his home on the followin' night." The major's eyes were still shut. He had passed out of his reverential mood, but the effort to be absolutely exact demanded concentration.

"I immediately called up Anthony, and told him that Judge Spofford of the Supreme Co't of Maryland would arrive the next day, and that I wanted the best dinner that could be served in the county, and the best bottle of wine in my cellar." The facts having been correctly stated, the major assumed his normal facial expression and opened his eyes.

"What I'm tellin' you occurred after the war, remember, when putty near everybody down our way was busted. Most of our niggers had run away, — all 'cept our old house servants, who never forgot our family pride and our noble struggle to keep up appearances. Well, suh, when Spofford arrived Anthony carried his bag to his room, and when dinner was announced, if it was my own table, I must say that it cert'ly did fa'rly groan with the delicacies of the season. After the crabs had been taken off, — we were alone, Mrs. Slocomb havin' gone to Baltimo', — I said to the judge, 'Yo' Honor, I am now about to delight yo' palate with the very best bottle of old madeira that ever passed yo' lips, — a wine that will warm yo' heart, and unbutton the top button of yo' vest. It is part of a special importation presented to Mrs. Slocomb's father by the captain of one of his ships. — Anthony, go down into the wine-cellar, the inner cellar, Anthony, and bring me a bottle of that old madeira of '37 — stop, Anthony ; make it '39. I think, judge, it is a little dryer.' Well, Anthony bowed and left the room, and in a few moments he came back, set a lighted candle on the mantel, and, leanin' over my chair, said in a loud whisper, 'De cellar am locked, suh, and I 'm 'feard Mis' Slocomb done tuk de key.'

“ ‘Well, s'pose she has,’ I said ; ‘put yo’

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

knee against it, and fo'ce the do'.' I knew my man, suh. Anthony never moved a muscle.

"Here the judge called out, 'Why, Major, I could n't think of'—

"'Now, yo' Honor,' said I, 'please don't say a word. This is my affair. The lock is not of the slightest consequence.'

"In a few minutes back comes Anthony, solemn as an owl, whitewash all up his back. 'Major,' said he, 'I done did all I c'u'd, an' dere ain't no way 'cept breakin' down de do'. Las' time I done dat, Mis' Slocomb neber forgib me fer a week.'

"The judge jumped up. 'Major, I won't have you breakin' yo' locks and annoyin' Mrs. Slocomb.'

"'Yo' Honor,' I said, 'please take yo' seat. I'm d——d if you shan't taste that wine, if I have to blow out the cellar walls.'

"'I tell you, major,' replied the judge in a very emphatic tone and with some slight anger, I thought, 'I ought not to drink yo' high-flavored madeira; my doctor told me only last week I must stop that kind of thing. If yo' servant will go upstairs and get a bottle of whiskey out of my bag, it's just what I ought to drink.'

"Now I want to tell you, Colonel,"—here the major closed one eye, and laid his forefinger against his nose, — “that at that time I had n’t had a bottle of any kind of wine in my cellar for five years.

“ ‘Of co’se, yo’ Honor,’ I said, ‘when you put it on a matter of yo’ health I am helpless ; that paralyzes my hospitality ; I have not a word to say. Anthony, go upstairs and get the bottle,’ and we drank the judge’s whiskey ! Now see the devotion and loyalty of that old negro servant, see his shrewdness ! Do you think this marsh-crane of Jack’s ” —

Here Jefferson threw open the door, ushering in half a dozen gentlemen, and among them the rightful host, just returned after a week’s absence, — cutting off the major’s outburst, and producing another equally explosive, —

“ Why, Jack ! ”

Before the two men grasp hands I must, in all justice to the major, say that he not only had a sincere admiration for Jack’s surroundings, but also for Jack himself, and that while he had not the slightest compunction in sharing or, for that matter, monopolizing his hospitality, he would have been equally generous in return had it been possible for him to revive the old days, and to afford a ménage equally lavish.

It is needless for me to make a like statement for Jack. One half the major's age, trained to practical business life from boyhood, frank, spontaneous, every inch a man, kindly natured and, for one so young, a deep student, of men as well as of books, it was not to be wondered at that not only the major but that every one else who knew him loved him. The major really interested him enormously. He represented a type which was new to him, and which it delighted him to study. The major's heartiness, his magnificent disregard for meum and tuum, his unique and picturesque mendacity, his grandiloquent manners at times, studied, as he knew, from some example of the old régime, whom he either consciously or unconsciously imitated, his peculiar devotion to the memory of his late wife, — all appealed to Jack's sense of humor, and to his enjoyment of anything out of the common. Under all this he saw, too, away down in the major's heart, beneath these several layers, a substratum of true kindness and tenderness.

This kindness, I know, pleased Jack best of all.

So when the major sprang up in delight, calling out, "Why, Jack!" it was with very genuine, although quite opposite, individual sympathies, that the two men shook hands. It was beautiful, too, to see the major welcome Jack to his own apartments, dragging up the most comfortable chair in the room, forcing him into it, and tucking a cushion under his head, or ringing up Jefferson every few moments for some new luxury. These he would catch away from that perfectly trained servant's tray, serving them himself, rattling on all the time as to how sorry he was that he did not know the exact hour at which Jack would arrive, that he might have had breakfast on the table — how hot had it been on the road — how well he was looking, etc.

It was specially interesting, besides, after the proper introductions had been made, to note the way in which Jack's friends, inoculated with the contagion of the major's mood, and carried away by his breezy, buoyant enthusiasm, encouraged the major to flow on, interjecting little asides about his horses and farm stock, agreeing to a man that the two-year-old colt — a pure creation on the moment of the major — would certainly beat the record and make the major's fortune, and inquiring with great solicitude whether the major felt quite sure that the addition to the stables which he contemplated would be large enough to accommodate his stud, with other similar inquiries which, while indefinite and tentative, were, so to speak, but flies thrown out on the stream of talk, — the major rising continuously, seizing the bait, and rushing headlong over sunken rocks and through tangled weeds of the improbable in a way that would have done credit to a Munchausen of older date. As for Jack, he let him run on. One plank in the platform of his hospitality was to give every guest a free rein.

Before the men separated for the day, the major had invited each individual person to make Crab Island his home for the balance of his life, regretting that no woman now graced his table since Mrs. Slocomb's death, — "Major Talbot's widow, Major John Talbot of Pocomoke, suh;" this impressively and with sudden gravity of tone, — placing his stables, his cellar, and his servants at their disposal, and arranging for everybody to meet everybody else the following day in Baltimore, the major starting that night, and Jack and his friends the next day. The whole party would then take passage on board one of the Chesapeake Bay boats, arriving off Crab Island at daylight the succeeding morning.

This was said with a spring and joyousness of manner, and a certain quickness of movement, that would surprise those unfamiliar with some of the peculiarities of Widow Talbot's second husband. For with that true spirit of vagabondage which saturated him, next to the exquisite luxury of lying sprawled on a lounge with a noiseless servant attached to the other end of an electric wire, nothing delighted the major so much as an outing, and no member of any such junketing party was more popular every hour of the journey. He could be host, servant, cook, chambermaid, errand-boy, and grand seigneur again in the same hour, adapting himself to every emergency that arose. His good-humor was perennial, unceasing, one constant flow, and never checked. He took care of the dogs, unpacked the bags, laid out everybody's linen, saw that the sheets were dry, received all callers so that the boys might sleep in the afternoon, — in fact, did all the disagreeable and uncomfortable things himself, and let everybody else have all the fun ; and this, too, unconsciously, graciously, and simply because he could not help it. When the outing ended, they parted from him with all the regret that they would from some chum of their college days. As for the major, he never wanted it to end. There was no office, nor law case, nor sick patient, nor ugly partner, nor complication of any kind, commercial, social, or professional, which could affect him. For him life was one prolonged drift ; so long as the last man remained he could stay. When they left, if there was enough in the larder to last over, he always made another day of it.

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

II

The major was standing on the steamboat wharf in Baltimore, nervously consulting his watch, when Jack and I stepped from a cab next day.

"Well, by gravy! is this all? Where are the other gentlemen?"

"They 'll be down in the morning, major," said Jack. "Where shall we send this baggage?"

"Here, just give it to me! Po'ter, po'ter!" in a stentorian voice. "Take these bags and guns, and put 'em on the upper deck alongside of my luggage. Now, gentlemen, just a sip of somethin' befo' they haul the gang-plank, — we 've six minutes yet."

The bar was across the street. On the way over, the major confided to Jack full information regarding the staterooms, remarking that he had selected the "fo' best on the upper deck," and adding that he would have paid for them himself only a friend had disappointed him.

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

It was evident that the barkeeper knew the major's peculiarities, for a tall, black bottle with a wobbly cork, consisting of a porcelain marble confined in a miniature bird-cage, was passed to the major before he had opened his mouth. When he did open it — the mouth — there was no audible protest as regards the selection. When he closed it again the flow line of the bottle had fallen some three fingers. It is, however, fair to the major to say that only one third of this amount was tucked away under his own waistcoat.

The trip down the bay was particularly enjoyable, brightened outside on the water by the most brilliant of sunsets, — a glory of purple and gold, — and made gay and delightful inside the after cabin by the charm of the major's talk, — the whole passenger-list becoming entranced as he skipped from politics and the fine arts to literature, tarrying a moment in his flight to discuss a yellow-backed book that had just been published, and coming to a full stop with the remark, —

“ And you have n't read that book, Jack, — that scurrilous attack on the industries of the South ? My dear fellow ! I 'm astounded that a man of yo' gifts should not — Here — just do me the favor to look through my baggage on the upper deck, and bring me a couple of books lyin' on top of my dressin'-case."

"Which trunk, major?" asked Jack, a slight smile playing around his mouth.

"Why, my sole-leather trunk, of co'se; or perhaps that English hat-box — no, stop, Jack, come to think, it is in the small valise. Here, take my keys," said the major, straightening his back, squeezing his fat hand into the pocket of his skin-tight trousers, and fishing up with his forefinger a small bunch of keys. "Right on top, Jack; you can't miss it."

"Isn't he just too lovely for anything?" said Jack to me, when we reached the upper deck, — I had followed him out. "He 's wearing now the only decent suit of clothes he owns, and the rest of his wardrobe you could stuff into a bandbox. English sole-leather trunk! Here, put your thumb on that catch," and he drew out the major's bag, — the one, of course, that Jefferson unpacked, with the galvanized-iron clasps and paper-leather sides.

To my surprise the bag seemed more rotund, and heavier, and more important-looking than when I handled it that afternoon in front of Delmonico's, presenting a well-fed, even a bloated, appearance. The clasps, too, appeared to have all they could do to keep its mouth shut, while the hinges bulged in an ominous way.

I started one clasp, in obedience to Jack's request; the other gave way with a burst, and the next instant, to my horror, the major's wardrobe littered the deck. First the books, then a package of tobacco, then the one shirt, porcelain-finished collars, and the other necessities, including a pair of slippers and a comb. Next, three bundles loosely wrapped, one containing two wax dolls, the others some small toys and a cheap Noah's ark, and last of all, wrapped up in coarse, yellow butcher's paper, stained and moist, a freshly cut porter-house steak.

Jack roared with laughter as he replaced the contents. "Yes; toys for the little children — he never goes back without something for them if it takes his last dollar; tobacco for his old cook, Rachel; not a thing for himself, you see — and this steak! Who do you suppose he bought that for?"

"Did you find it?" called out the major, as we reëntered the cabin.

"Yes; but it was n't in the English trunk," said Jack, handing back the keys, grave as a judge, not a smile on his face.

"Of co'se not; did n't I tell you it was in the small bag? Now, gentlemen, listen!" turning the leaves. "Here is a man who has the impertinence to say that our industries are paralyzed. It is not our industries; it is our people. Robbed of their patrimony, their fields laid waste, their estates confiscated by a system of foreclosure lackin' every vestige of decency and co'tesy, — Shylocks wantin' their pound of flesh on the very hour and day, — why should n't they be paralyzed?" He laughed heartily. "Jack, you know Colonel Dorsey Kent, don't you?"

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

Jack did not, but the owners of several names on the passenger list did, and hitched their camp-stools closer.

"Well, Kent was the only man I ever knew who ever held out against the damnable oligarchy."

Here an old fellow in a butternut suit, with a half-moon of white whiskers tied under his chin, leaned forward in rapt attention.

The major braced himself, and continued, "Kent, gentlemen, as many of you know, lived with his maiden sister over on Tinker Neck, on the same piece of ground where he was bo'n. She had a life interest in the house and property, and it was so nominated in the bond. Well, when it got down to hog and hominy, and very little of that, she told Kent she was goin' to let the place to a strawberry planter from Philadelphia, and go to Baltimo' to teach school. She was sorry to break up the home, but there was nothing else to do. Well, it hurt Kent to think she had to leave home and work for her living, for he was a very tender-hearted man.

“ ‘You don't say so, Jane,’ said he, ‘and you raised here! Isn't that very sudden?’ She told him it was, and asked him what he was going to do for a home when the place was rented.

“ ‘Me, Jane? I shan't do anythin'. I shall stay here. If your money affairs are so badly mixed up that you're obliged to leave yo' home, I am very deeply grieved, but I am powerless to help. I am not responsible for the way this war ended. I was born here, and here I am going to stay.’ And he did. Nothing could move him. She finally had to rent him with the house, — he to have three meals a day, and a room over the kitchen.

“For two years after that Kent was so disgusted with life, and the turn of events, that he used to lie out on a rawhide, under a big sycamore tree in front of the po'ch, and get a farm nigger to pull him round into the shade by the tail of the hide, till the grass was worn as bare as yo' hand. Then he got a bias-cut rockin'-chair, and rocked himself round.

"The strawberry man said, of co'se, that he was too lazy to live. But I look deeper than that. To me, gentlemen, it was a crushin', silent protest against the money power of our times. And it never broke his spirit, neither. Why, when the census man came down a year befo' the colonel's death, he found him sittin' in his rockin'-chair, bareheaded. Without havin' the decency to take off his own hat, or even ask Kent's permission to speak to him, the census man began askin' questions, — all kinds, as those damnable fellows do. Colonel Kent let him ramble on for a while, then he brought him up standin'.

" 'Who did you say you were, suh?'

" 'The United States census-taker.'

" 'Ah, a message from the enemy. Take a seat on the grass.'

" 'It's only a matter of form,' said the man.

" 'So I presume, and very bad form, suh,' looking at the hat still on the man's head. 'But go on.'

" 'Well, what's yo' business?' asked the agent, taking out his book and pencil.

" 'My business, suh?' said the colonel, risin' from his chair, mad clear through, 'I've no business, suh. I am a prisoner of war wait-in' to be exchanged!' and he stomped into the house."

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

Here the major burst into a laugh, straightened himself up to his full height, squeezed the keys back into his pocket, and said he must take a look into the staterooms on the deck to see if they were all ready for his friends for the night.

When I turned in for the night, he was on deck again, still talking, his hearty laugh ringing out every few moments. Only the white-whiskered man was left. The other camp-stools were empty.

III

At early dawn the steamboat slowed down, and a scow, manned by two barefooted negroes with sweep oars, rounded to. In a few moments the major, two guns, two valises, Jack, and I were safely landed on its wet bottom, the major's bag with its precious contents stowed between his knees.

To the left, a mile or more away, lay Crab Island, the landed estate of our host, — a delicate, green thread on the horizon line, broken by two knots, one evidently a large house with chimneys, and the other a clump of trees. The larger knot proved to be the manor house that sheltered the belongings of the major, with the wine-cellars of marvelous vintage, the table that groaned, the folding mahogany doors that swung back for bebies of beauties, and perhaps, for all I know, the gray-haired, ebony butler in the green coat. The smaller knot, Jack said, screened from public view the little clubhouse belonging to his friends and himself.

As the sun rose and we neared the shore, there came into view on the near end of the island the rickety outline of a palsied old dock, clutching with one arm a group of piles anchored in the marsh grass, and extending the other as if in welcome to the slow-moving scow. We accepted the invitation, threw a line over a thumb of a pile, and in five minutes were seated in a country stage. Ten more, and we backed up to an old-fashioned colonial porch, with sloping roof and dormer windows supported by high white columns. Leaning over the broken railing of the porch was a half-grown negro boy, hatless and barefooted ; inside the door, looking furtively out, half concealing her face with her apron, stood an old negro woman, her head bound with a bandana kerchief, while peeping from behind an outbuilding was a group of children in sunbonnets and straw hats, — “the farmer’s boys and girls,” the major said, waving his hand, as we drove up, his eyes brightening. Then there was the usual collection of farmyard fowl, beside two great hounds, who visited each one of us in turn, their noses rubbing our knees.

If the major, now that he was on his native heath, realized in his own mind any difference between the Eldorado which his eloquence had conjured up in my own mind, the morning before in Jack’s room, and the hard, cold facts before us, he gave no outward sign. To all appearances, judging from his perfect ease and good temper, the paint-scaled pillars were the finest of Carrara marble, the bare floors were carpeted with the softest fabrics of Turkish looms, and the big, sparsely furnished rooms were so many salons where princes trod in pride and fair ladies stepped a measure.

The only remark he made was in answer to a look of surprise on my face when I peered curiously into the bare hall and made a cursory mental inventory of its contents.

“Yes, Colonel; you will find, I regret to say, some slight changes since the old days. Then, too, my home is in slight confusion owin’ to the spring cleanin', and a good many things have been put away."

I looked to Jack for explanation, but if that thoroughbred knew where the major had permanently put the last batch of his furniture, he, too, gave no outward sign.

As for the servants, were there not old Rachel and Sam, chef and valet? What more could one want? The major's voice, too, had lost none of its persuasive powers.

"Here, Sam, you black imp, carry yo' Marster Jack's gun and things to my room, and, Rachel, take the colonel's bag to the sea-room, next to the dinin'-hall. Breakfast in an hour, gentlemen, as Mrs. Slocomb used to say."

I found only a bed covered with a quilt, an old table with small drawers, a washstand, two chairs, and a desk on three legs. The walls were bare except for a fly-stained map yellow with age. As I passed through the sitting-room, Rachel preceding me with my traps, I caught a glimpse of traces of better times. There was a plain wooden mantelpiece, a wide fireplace with big brass andirons, a sideboard with and without brass handles and a limited number of claw feet, — which if brought under the spell of the scraper and varnish-pot might once more regain its lost estate, — a corner cupboard built into the wall, half full of fragments of old china, and, to do justice to the major's former statement, there was also a pair of dull old mahogany doors with glass knobs separating the room from some undiscovered, unknown territory of bareness and emptiness beyond. These, no doubt, were the doors Anthony threw open for the bebies of beauties so picturesquely described by the major ; but where were the Chippendale furniture, the George III. silver, the Italian marble mantels with carved lions' heads, the marquetry floors and cabinets ?

I determined to end my mental suspense. I would ask Rachel and get at the facts. The old woman was opening the windows, letting in the fresh breath of a honeysuckle, and framing a view of the sea beyond.

"How long have you lived here, aunty?"

"'Most fo'ty years, sah. Long 'fo' Massa John Talbot died."

"Where 's old Anthony?" I said.

"What Anthony? De fust major's body-servant?"

"Yes."

"Go 'long, honey. He 's daid dese twenty years. Daid two years 'fo' Massa Slocomb married Mis' Talbot."

A GENTLEMAN VAGABOND

“And Anthony never waited at all on Major Slocomb?”

“How could he wait on him, honey, when he daid ‘fo’ he see him?”

I pondered for a moment over the picturesque quality of the major’s mendacity.

Was it, then, only another of the major’s tributes to his wife, — this whole story of Anthony and the madeira of ’39? How he must have loved this dear relict of his military predecessor!

An hour later the major strolled into the sitting-room, his arm through Jack’s.

“Grand old place, is it not?” he said, turning to me. “Full of historic interest. Of co’sse the damnable oligarchy has stripped us, but” —

Here Aunt Rachel flopped in — her slippers, I mean; the sound was distinctly audible.

“All right, Rachel. Come, gentlemen!”

When we were all seated, the major leaned back in his chair, toyed with his knife a moment, and said with an air of great deliberation, —

“Gentlemen, when I was in New York I discovered that the fashionable dish of the day was a po’ter-house steak. So when I knew you were coming, I wired my agent in Baltimo’ to go to Lexington market and to send me down on ice the best steak he could buy fo' money. It is now befo' you.

“ Jack, shall I cut you a piece of the tenderloin ? ”
